PREFACE

THE purpose of this work is to make more easily accessible to the student and to the general reader some of the original sources relating to the Reconstruction period. The documents reproduced will assist to an understanding of the peculiar conditions — social, political and economic — that prevailed in the Southern states during the Reconstruction. The first volume consists of selections illustrative of the condition of the South after the war, the problems to be solved and the attempts of the President and Congress to solve them, ending with the readmission of the late Confederate States to the Union. The second volume will illustrate the working out in the Southern states of the Congressional plan of Reconstruction, and the adjustments that followed later.

The documents presented are principally laws, state and federal, official reports, and political platforms; accounts of Northern men and foreigners living or traveling in the South; accounts of Southerners, white and black, ex-Confederates and Unionists, Conservatives and Radicals. With the exception of the laws and political documents the material used consists mainly of accounts by persons who had first hand acquaintance with conditions in the South. Owing to the necessity for condensation I have had to leave unused five-sixths of the material gathered while all that has been included has been subjected to a vigorous pruning of all unessential matter. Some congressional debates on matters of theory or policy are included, but I have been obliged reluctantly to omit most of the documents illustrative of those important facts in Reconstruction — viz., the development of public sentiment in the North before 1868 and the reaction that came later.

This public opinion which made possible the Reconstruction and its undoing, is, however, here reflected in the laws and political platforms. Illustrations of it can easily be found in the files of the leading newspapers of the North, such as the Tribune, and the Nation, which are more accessible even in Southern libraries than the files of important Southern journals. So this field has been somewhat neglected in order to develop others quite as important and more difficult of access. And it may be objected that the Radical side is given space out of proportion to its merits. This is due to the fact that most of the official documents and collections of testimony are of Radical origin and have been better preserved than the Conservative material, much of which has been lost and destroyed or is still inaccessible. All who have done work in Southern history know of the exasperating difficulties that still lie in the way of the use of documents which are in the hands of private individuals. Consequently, the history of the Conservative element must in many cases be developed from unfriendly sources, or from documents that have degenerated through careless or unfriendly use. While the bias of the documents in the first volume is toward the Radical, the reverse is true in the second volume. The dates given in the introductory note at the head of each document indicate the period covered by the document and also the date of origin of the present form of the document. Often the dates are the same. The difference between the two is in some degree a measure of the deterioration of the document.

An examination of the contents of the first volume will show that the origin of the various documents and extracts is about as follows: State laws, 25; federal laws, 17; accounts of Northern men, 148; of Southern men (ex-Confederate), 62; of Southern Unionist and Radical, 22; of negroes, 12; of foreigners, 2. In most of the documents the psychological element is important, especially in the non-legal documents. Of the latter, about 64 are from what may be called the Southern point of view; 118 are from the opposite point of view, and 70 are more or less indifferent or impartial. These may be readily interpreted with proper allowance for the personal equation; to those who desire it, the secondary accounts referred to at the end of each Introduction will furnish the information necessary to construct the historical background; a few words of explanation are given in some of the introductory notes for the purpose of furnishing a clew to the point of view illustrated in that particular document.

For assistance given me during the past six years while working on this collection I am indebted to many considerate friends, North and South, and for special favors to the following: Dr. Thomas M. Owen of the Alabama Department of Archives and History; President D. B. Purinton and Professor Waitman Barbe of West Virginia University; Hon. Dunbar Rowland of the Mississippi Department of Archives and History; Mr. Worthington C. Ford, Chief of the Division of Manuscripts, Library of Congress; Mr. L. S. Boyd, of the library of the Inter-State Commerce Commission; the authorities of the West Virginia University Library, and of the Library of Congress; Generals F. C. Ainsworth and George B. Davis of the War Department; Hon. Junius Riggs of the Alabama Supreme Court Library; Senator Stephen B. Elkins; Hon. A. A. Wiley, Montgomery, Alabama; Dr. G. P. L. Reid, Marion, Alabama; Mr. T. C. Thompson, Chattanooga, Tennessee; Hon. J. S. Reynolds, Columbia, South Carolina; Professor Yates Snowden, South Carolina College; Mrs. Myrta Lockett Avary; Mrs. E. G.

Boyd; Mr. G. W. Duncan of the University Publishing Company; Dr. R. G. Thwaites, Wisconsin Historical Society; Mr Albert Phelps, New Orleans; Hon. W. B. Ridgeley, Comptroller of the Currency. At all stages of the work I have been aided by my wife.

THE SOUTH AFTER THE WAR: ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL CONDITIONS

INTRODUCTION

THE course of Reconstruction was affected to a great degree by the conditions found in the South after the close of the Civil War. In all material aspects these conditions were bad; but of the popular state of mind it is difficult to form a judgment. The documents given below aim to illustrate the social and economic disorder that existed and to exhibit the contradictory opinions held as to the character and temper of the Southern whites.

The loss of life among the Southern soldiers had been large, while great numbers were injured by wounds and by the diseases and hardships of camp and prison. These men, many of them unable to work, came home to find everywhere almost complete economic ruin. Accumulated capital and improvements had disappeared. Slave property, banking capital, bonds and other securities, mills, factories, gins, public buildings, bridges, railroads, steamboats, farm stock and farm implements, furniture and often private houses and property — all these were destroyed, captured or worn out in the four years' war which touched every part of the South. A million white people in the remote districts were for a year or more on the verge of starvation, and many died from lack of food. In the white districts there was destitution after 1862, and the Confederate government had been taxed to the utmost to prevent starvation. The collapse of the Confederacy left the destitute people without hope of relief. Later the United States government and private charity came to the rescue, but it was ten years before suffering ceased to be common.

The fall of the Confederacy left ten states practically without government for several months; great stretches of country on the military frontiers had been without settled institutions since 1861, and in such districts and in the back country were gathered deserters from both armies, bushwhackers, and other outlaws who preyed upon the defenseless people. Those who had been persecuted as Unionists by the Confederates now retaliated. Negro insurrections were feared. The Federal garrisons, the only reliance to enforce order, were few and small, and the troops were not of the best character — the best ones clamoring for discharge, went north to be mustered out, while those left were principally ill-disciplined blacks, guilty of much disorder.

During this period when there was no authority to protect the Southern people, the territory of the former states was invaded by swarms of treasury agents, or those who pretended to be, searching for confiscable property. No distinction appears to have been made by them between property legally subject to confiscation and property that was not. These agents often united with native thieves and plundered the country of the little that was left in the way of supplies, cotton, tobacco, corn, etc. The statistics show that the Government profited nothing by the confiscations: it has given back to the owners nearly all it received; but most of the proceeds went into the pockets of the agents.

And when the white farmer was endeavoring to begin anew and the black farmer was for the first time working for himself, there came upon the impoverished people the crushing burden of the cotton tax: two and one-half to three cents a pound — $12 to $15 a bale — which took about $70,000,000 from the cotton farmers in 1865-1868. The three years' tax in Alabama, though short crops were made, was equivalent to one-fifth of the total value of the land in the state; in Georgia the negro's cotton tax was nearly twice the amount of rent he paid. Proposals for still heavier taxation were defeated in 1867, by the opposition, it is said, of Northern commercial bodies.

Besides the dark economic outlook there were other matters that irritated or depressed the Southern white population: the fall of the Confederacy; the arrest and imprisonment of their leaders; irritation by the army, Freedmen's Bureau, missionaries, etc; demands by some that the South should acknowledge its sin in slavery and secession, repudiate its former leaders, and not consider it "honorable to have engaged in rebellion;" the prohibition against historical societies and reunions of soldiers; and against the wearing of Confederate clothes or colors, or singing Confederate songs; the persistent misrepresentations, by agitators for selfish purposes, of the character and conduct of the white people; the instigation of the blacks to lawlessness; the question of social and business relations with Northern men; and the negro problem. All these irritants acted with varying effect upon the several classes of the Southern whites — the soldiers, the stay-at-homes, the "fire-eaters," and the women; and upon these people depended the ultimate success or failure of any plan of Reconstruction that might be adopted.

To the North the problem of the negro was the most important one. The blacks suffered dreadfully in the last years of the war and for several years after, in Federal camps, or around the towns in the "contraband" colonies. They behaved well when freedom came, but great numbers ceased to work for self-support. De Bow in 1866 estimated that their numbers had decreased by one-fourth, too large an estimate, no doubt. The Federal army officers for a while planned the separation of the races and several experiments were made. The treatment of the blacks by former masters, by low whites, and by the Unionists, was a burning question upon which there was much disagreement in the North, though all seemed to agree that the former masters were not to be trusted in matters relating to negroes. Negro suffrage was suggested at the very first, and in respect to it, Northern radical, Black Belt planter, the average Southern white, and the Unionist, each held different views.

There was a general desire at the North to know what the Southern people were thinking and doing, and before the Confederate soldiers had reached their homes every important newspaper in the North had a correspondent travelling in the South. The President sent down several agents, among them General Carl Schurz, a German revolutionist of 1848 who had served in the Federal army; Benjamin C. Truman, a well known newspaper man; Harvey M. Watterson, of Kentucky, a Southern Unionist (whose son Henry, later editor of the Courier-Journal, was in the Confederate army); Chief Justice Chase; General U. S. Grant and others. In 1866 the Joint Committee of Congress on Reconstruction took a mass of testimony from witnesses who were in general hostile to the South. Whitelaw Reid and John T. Trowbridge both wrote books on their travels in the South in 1865. Freedmen's Bureau and army officers made voluminous reports.

Robert Somers, Southern States, pp. 37, 114. An English traveler's observations in 1870. [1865-1870]

NEVER had a completer ruin fallen upon any city than fell upon Charleston. . . Her planters were reduced from affluence to poverty — her merchants were scattered to the four winds of heaven — her shopkeepers closed their doors, or contrived to support a precarious existence on contraband of war — her young men went to die on the battlefields or in the military prisons of the North — her women and children, who could, fled to the country. The Federal Government kept Charleston under close blockade, and added to its miseries by occasional bombardments. When this process in five years had reached the last stage of exhaustion, and the military surrender gave practical effect to emancipation, the negroes in the country parts, following up the childlike instinct of former days that Charleston was the El Dorado of the world, flocked into the ruined town, and made its aspect of misery and desolation more complete. . . The houses had not only lost all their bright paint without, but were mostly tenantless within; many fine mansions, long deserted, were fast mouldering into decay and ruin; and the demand for labor and the supply of provisions were at the lowest point. Seldom has there been a more hopeless chaos out of which to construct a new order of things than Charleston presented in those days. Yet the process of amelioration has year by year been steadily going forward. . . Some of the old planters have also survived, and are seen, though diminished in numbers and with saddened countenances, yet with the steady fire of Anglo-Saxon courage in their eyes, attending to affairs like men determined to conquer fortune even in the depths of ruin and in the brink of the grave. . .

The [Tennessee Valley] consists for the most part of plantations in a state of semi-ruin, and plantations of which the ruin is for the present total and complete. . . The trail of war is visible throughout the valley in burnt up gin-houses, ruined bridges, mills, and factories, of which latter the gable walls only are left standing, and in large tracts of once cultivated land stripped of every vestige of fencing. The roads, long neglected, are in disorder, and having in many places become impassable, new tracks have been made through the woods and fields without much respect to boundaries. Borne down by debts, losses, and accumulating taxes, many who were once the richest among their fellows have disappeared from the scene, and few have yet risen to take their places. But generally the old homesteads and the old families continue to be the centres of reviving industry and cultivation, and many valiant efforts have been made since the war to stay the advancing tide of barrenness and ruin. Fences have been rebuilt round not a few of the plantations, and the negro and the mule been once more set to work in growing corn and cotton.

Destruction in the Valley of Virginia

Report of Joint Committee on Reconstruction, part ii, p. 68. Statement of a native of Virginia. [1866]

PEOPLE are thinking about their private business; they want to go to work to repair their losses; they do not wish any more war, domestic or foreign war, if it can be avoided. They are tired of war. . . They are an afflicted people, terribly afflicted; almost all of them have lost sons or brothers; the country is full of widows and orphans and destitute people. I think that on the whole, the people are bearing their misfortunes with cheerfulness and fortitude, and are anxious now just to get the means of restoring their losses, and if politicians would let them alone, I think there would be no trouble whatever. . .

From Harper's Ferry to New Market, which is about eighty miles, . . . the country was almost a desert. There were no fences. Speaking of the condition of the valley after General Sheridan retired, I described wheat-fields growing without any enclosure; someone asked me whether the stock would not destroy the wheat. I said "Certainly, if General Sheridan had not taken the precaution of removing all the stock." We could cultivate grain without fences, as we had no cattle, hogs, sheep, or horses, or anything else. The fences were all gone; some of the orchards were very much injured, but the fruit trees had not been . . . destroyed. The barns were all burned; a great many of the private dwellings were burned; chimneys standing without houses, and houses standing without roof, or door, or window; a most desolate state of affairs; bridges all destroyed, roads badly cut up.

The Wear and Tear of War

Whitelaw Reid, After the War, p. 224. Reid was later editor of the New York Tribune. He is now ambassador to England. He traveled in the South for several months in 1865. He quotes the following description from General Boynton. [1865]

EVERYTHING has been mended, and generally in the rudest style. Window-glass has given way to thin boards, and these are in use in railway coaches and in the cities. Furniture is marred and broken, and none has been replaced for four years. Dishes are cemented in various styles, and half the pitchers have tin handles. A complete set of crockery is never seen, and in very few families is there enough to set a table. . . . A set of forks with whole tines is a curiosity. Clocks and watches have nearly all stopped. . . . Hair brushes and tooth brushes have all worn out; combs are broken and are not yet replaced; pins, needles, and thread, and a thousand such articles, which seem indispensable to housekeeping, are very scarce. Even in weaving on the looms, corn-cobs have been substituted for spindles. Few have pocket knives. In fact, everything that has heretofore been an article of sale at the South is wanting now. At the tables of those who were once esteemed luxurious providers, you will find neither tea, coffee, sugar, nor spices of any kind. Even candles, in some cases, have been replaced by a cup of grease, in which a piece of cloth is plunged for a wick. The problem which the South had to solve has been, not how to be comfortable during the war, but how to live at all.

The Impoverished South

Senate Ex. Doc. no. 2, 39 Cong., 1 Sess., p. 38: Report of General Carl Schurz to President Johnson. Schurz was sent by the President to investigate conditions in the South. [1865]

IT is, indeed, difficult to imagine circumstances more unfavorable for the development of a calm and unprejudiced public opinion than those under which the southern people are at present laboring. The war has not only defeated their political aspirations, but it has broken up their whole social organization. When the rebellion was put down they found themselves not only conquered in a political and military sense, but economically ruined. The planters, who represented the wealth of the southern country, are partly laboring under the severest embarrassments, partly reduced to absolute poverty. Many who are stripped of all available means, and have nothing but their land, cross their arms in gloomy despondency, incapable of rising to a manly resolution. Others, who still possess means, are at a loss how to use them, as their old way of doing things is, by the abolition of slavery, rendered impracticable. . . Others are still trying to go on in the old way, and that old way is in fact the only one they understand, and in which they have any confidence. Only a minority is trying to adopt the new order of things. A large number of the plantations . . . is under heavy mortgages, and the owners know that, unless they retrieve their fortunes in a comparatively short space of time, their property will pass out of their hands. . . The nervous anxiety which such a state of things produces extends also to those classes of society which, although not composed of planters, were always in business connection with the planting interest, and there was hardly a branch of commerce or industry in the south which was not directly or indirectly so connected. Besides, the southern soldiers, when returning from the war, did not, like the northern soldiers, find a prosperous community which merely waited for their arrival to give them remunerative employment. They found, many of them, their homesteads destroyed, their farms devastated, their families in distress; and those that were less unfortunate found, at all events, an impoverished and exhausted community which had but little to offer them. Thus a great many have been thrown upon the world to shift as best they can. They must do something honest or dishonest, and must do it soon, to make a living, and their prospects are, at present, not very bright.

"The Crown of Poverty"

Susan Dabney Smedes, Memorials of a Southern Planter, p. 231. Copyright, 1887. This extract is used by permission of James Pott & Co. Mrs. Smedes was writing of her father, Col. Thomas L. Dabney, a Mississippi planter. [1865-1870]

It was now the autumn of 1866. One night he walked upstairs to the room where his children were sitting with a paper in his hand. "My children," he said, "I am a ruined man. The sheriff is down-stairs. He has served this writ on me. It is for a security debt. I do not even know how many more such papers have my name on them." His face was white as he said these words. He was sixty-eight years of age, with a large and helpless family on his hands, and the country in such a condition that young men scarcely knew how to make a livelihood.

The sheriff came with more writs. Thomas roused himself to meet them all. He determined to pay every dollar. But to do this he must have time. The sale of everything that he owned would not pay all these claims. . .

A gentleman to whom he owed personally several thousand dollars courteously forebore to send in his claim. Thomas was determined that he should not on this account fail to get his money, and wrote, urging him to bring a friendly suit, that, if the worst came, he would at least get his proportion. Thus urged, the friendly suit was brought, the man deprecating the proceeding. . .

And now the judgments . . . went against him one by one. On the 27th November, 1866, the Burleigh plantation was put up at auction and sold, but the privilege of buying it in a certain time reserved to Thomas. At this time incendiary fires were common. There was not much law in the land. We heard of the gin-houses and cotton-houses that were burned in all directions. One day as Thomas came back from a business journey the smouldering ruins of his gin-house met his eye. . . All the cotton that he owned was consumed in it. He had not a dollar. He had to borrow the money to buy a postage stamp, not only during this year, but during many years to come. . .

Many honorable men in the South were taking the benefit of the bankrupt law. Thomas's relations and friends urged him to take the law. It was madness, they said, for a man of his age, in the condition the country was then in, to talk of settling the immense debts that were against him. He refused with scorn to listen to such proposals. But his heart was well-nigh broken. He called his children around him, as he lay in bed, not eating and scarcely sleeping.

"My children," he said, "I shall have nothing to leave you but a fair name. But you may depend that I shall leave you that. I shall, if I live, pay every dollar that I owe. If I die, I leave these debts to you to discharge. Do not let my name be dishonored." . . .

But he soon aroused himself from his depression and set about arranging to raise the money needed to buy in the plantation. It could only be done by giving up all the money brought in by the cotton crop for many years. This meant rigid self denial for himself and his children. He could not bear the thought of seeing his daughters deprived of comforts. He was ready to stand unflinchingly any fate that might be in store for him. . . . He determined to spare his daughters all such labor as he could perform. General Sherman had said that he would like to bring every Southern woman to the wash-tub. "He shall never bring my daughters to the wash-tub," Thomas Dabney said. "I will do the washing myself." And he did it for two years. He was in his seventieth year when he began to do it.

This may give some idea of the labors, the privations, the hardships, of those terrible years. The most intimate friends of Thomas, nay, his own children, who were not in the daily life at Burleigh, have never known the unprecedented self-denial, carried to the extent of acutest bodily sufferings, which he practiced during this time. A curtain must be drawn over the life of my lion-hearted father!

Oftentimes he was so exhausted when he came in to dinner that he could not eat for a while. He had his old bright way of making everyone take an interest in his pursuits, — sympathy was as necessary and sweet to him as to a child, — and he showed with pride what he had done by his personal labor in gardening and in washing. He placed the clothes on the line as carefully as if they were meant to hang there always, and they must be admired, too! He said, and truly, that he had never seen snowier ones. . . . At the end of a hard day's work he would say, sometimes, "General Sherman has not brought my daughters to the wash-tub." . . . His hands were much bent with age and gout. No glove could be drawn over them. They had been so soft that a bridle rein, unless he had his gloves on, chafed them unpleasantly. He expressed thankfulness that the bent fingers and palms did not interfere with his holding either his hoe-handle or his pen. . . . He tried hard to learn to plough, but could not do it. It was a real disappointment. He tried to learn to cut wood, but complained that he could not strike twice in the same spot. It was with great labor that he got a stick cut in two. His failure in this filled him with a dogged determination to succeed, and he persisted in cutting wood in the most painful manner, often till he was exhausted. Some one told him of a hand-saw for sawing wood, and he was delighted and felt independent when he got one. He enjoyed it like a new toy, and it was so much better in his hands than the axe. He sawed wood by the hour, in the cold and in the heat. . . .

The Ruin of the Slaveholders

J. S. Pike, The Prostrate State. p. 117. Pike was a native of Maine, traveling in South Carolina in 1871. From 1861 to 1866 he was minister to Belgium. In 1871 he was associate editor of the New York Tribune. [1865+]

EVERYTHING went into Confederate securities; everything to eat and everything to wear was consumed, and when the war suddenly ended there was nothing left but absolute poverty and nakedness. Famine followed, and suffering beyond computation, the story of which has never been told. Rich planters' families subsisted on corn-bread when they could get it, but often they could not, and then they resorted to a coarse cattle fodder known as "cow-peas." It is reported of the poet Timrod, who contributed his fiery lyrics in aid of the rebellion — all that he had to give — that he and his were saved from actual starvation, when they were at their last gasp, just previous to his death. Others fared not so well.

There were numerous large slave-holders and property-owners in and about Columbia who went down in the general ruin. Some were immensely wealthy; there were several families owning 500 and 1000 slaves apiece. Many were proprietors of plantations on the banks of the Mississippi. These plantations were more or less mortgaged. When slavery went, the mortgages consumed the rest; and men enjoying an income of $100,000 a year on the opening of the war were stripped of their last cent at its close. An elderly gentleman of nearly eighty years, formerly a rich man, and president of a bank of about $1,000,000 capital, was able by great exertion to save his dwelling from conflagration in Columbia. It was all he preserved from the wreck of his fortunes. Happily he was a lover of flowers, and had a large greenhouse in his gardens. In his stripped condition he resorted to it for support; and today he lives by personally growing flowers for sale, which he does with a cheerful assiduity which gilds his misfortunes, and lends even a pleasing glow to the evening of his life. Old Wade Hampton, of Revolutionary memory, who won his spurs at the battle of Eutaw Springs, and was an aid-de-camp of General Washington, was a resident of Columbia, and owned vast estates. He and his family were the grandees of the county for all these subsequent generations. They numbered their slaves by the thousand when the war began, and had large plantations in other States. The family is now broken and scattered. The great old family mansion and extensive grounds filled with rare exotics, the abode of luxurious hospitality for seventy years, has, since the war, been haunted by ghosts, and now, dilapidated and falling into decay, passes into the hands of strangers. In the vicinity lived a gentleman whose income, when the war broke out, was rated at $150,000 a year. He was not only a victim to the general ruin, but peculiar circumstances added to his misfortunes. Not a vestige of his whole vast property of millions remains today. Not far distant were the estates of a large proprietor and a well known family, rich and distinguished for generations. The slaves are gone. The family is gone. A single scion of the house remains, and he peddles tea by the pound and molasses by the quart, on a corner of the old homestead, to the former slaves of the family, and thereby earns his livelihood. . .

But the poor people were stripped as well as the rich. Though they had but little, yet that little was their all. And to lose it was to lose all. And to this was added a grievous disappointment. . . They were hoarding their imaginary money, feeling that they were sure to come out rich in the end. Great was their dismay and their astonishment when they found they had leaned on a broken reed, and their visions of sudden wealth had vanished in an instant.

The Wreck of the Railways

House Report no. 34, 39 Cong., 2 Sess., pp. 714, 821, 832, 866, 1026, 1036. The following extracts are from the reports of the principal Southern railways in 1865. [1865]

FROM Pocahontas to Decatur, [Alabama] one-hundred and fourteen miles, almost entirely destroyed, except the road-bed and iron rails and they in very bad condition — every bridge and trestle destroyed, cross-ties rotten, buildings burned, water-tanks gone, ditches filled up, and track grown up in weeds and bushes; not a saw-mill near the line; the labor system of the country gone. About forty miles of the track was burned, cross-ties entirely destroyed, and rails bent and twisted in such manner as to require great labor to straighten, and a large portion of them requiring renewal. . .

That portion of the road [in Mississippi] not having received any attention since 1862, it became enveloped with briars, bushes, and grass, the undisturbed growth of three years, thus causing . . the decay of the pine timber used in its construction. There was scarcely a single bridge on that section that was not wholly or in part, destroyed by fire, or rendered unfit for use by decay. Of the cross-ties on this section, fully three fourths have to be replaced to render the road safe for the transit of cars and locomotives. . .

Of the splendidly equipped road . . of the 49 locomotives, 37 passenger cars, (many of which had never been used,) and 550 freight, baggage, and gravel cars, there remained fit for use, though in a damaged condition, between Jackson and Canton, 1 locomotive, 2 second class passenger cars, 1 first class passenger car, 1 baggage car, 1 provision car, 2 stock and 2 flat cars.

On the section between Jackson and Brookhaven, there were in use 2 locomotives, damaged, having been partly burned; 4 box-cars, one of which was used for passengers, and 9 flat cars. All the other locomotives have been burned or damaged by time and exposure, and rendered unfit for service. . . Of all the depot buildings and platforms attached, woodsheds, and water stations and division houses, which were in complete repair in 1862, there remained only [three] buildings . . the remainder having all, from time to time, been destroyed by the armed forces in their vicinity.

In Selma [Alabama], the depot, shops, with the tools and machinery, foundry, engine-house, and store-house were in ruins. The track was damaged, and covered with the wrecks of burnt locomotives and cars which had been left in a disabled condition. . . All the truss-bridges and station-houses, and several of the water-tanks south of Shelby Springs, were burnt. About one mile of the track was rendered unserviceable by the burning of the cross-ties and the bending of the iron. North of Talladega the . . bridges and all the station-houses were destroyed by General Croxton's command. The rolling stock which had been saved had been cut off from the road by the destruction of two bridges on the Selma and Meridian road, and consequently could not be made available in the work of reconstruction. The laboring force . . was in great part scattered and demoralized. Throughout the country disorganization, and a general scarcity of provisions, and of all appliances and means of carrying on work, prevailed. There was no money in the treasury and no means of securing it.

I found the road [in Tennessee and Georgia] in bad condition; the track force had been over two weeks at work repairing; still it was with difficulty I passed over it with the train. The iron had been torn up at the principal road-crossings; stock-gaps were out of order, and fences built across the track; ditches filled up; . . . in many of the cuts the iron was covered with loose rock and dirt; the embankments had settled and washed; culverts filled up; track out of line . . . new cross-ties wanted to replace those too rotten to hold a spike. Trestles had to be overhauled. . . . Water-stations out of order, having been dry for two years. Turning-table at Trenton full of mud; had to be rewalled. The depots had to be weather-boarded. The iron alone remained unhurt, unchanged by the lapse of time and the dreadful effects of civil war. . . .

At Columbia [South Carolina] all the shops, depots, and buildings of every description, most of the valuable tools, many new and of the most approved makes, with all the appliances of as complete a shop, just finished, as, for its design, perhaps, the southern country could exhibit — all these, together with a very large and most valuable collection of material, obtained only with great difficulty and at great expense, were utterly destroyed. On the line of road . . . with rare exceptions, the entire wooden structures, cross-ties, culverts, station-houses, water-tanks experienced a like fate; and the rails burnt, twisted, and bent into shapes utterly baffling all efforts at restoration.

2. DESTITUTION AND WANT AMONG THE WHITES

Suffering in the White Counties

Senate Ex. Doc. no. 27, 39 Cong., 1 Sess., pp. 68, 73, 77. Accounts of Freedmen's Bureau officials in Alabama. [1865]

Two months ago women and children and broken down men came thirty and forty miles . . . to beg a little food. . .

Much destitution also exists among the families of the late rebels, for the soldiery, . . . consumed their substance when the means of the Union people were all exhausted. Like Actaeon, they were eaten up by their own dogs. The general destitution has rendered many kindly disposed people unable to do anything for the negroes who were formerly their slaves, and who might be supposed to have some claims upon them for temporary assistance on that account, and there is much suffering among the aged and infirm, the sick and the helpless, of this class of people. . . It is a common, an every-day sight in Randolph county, that of women and children, most of whom were formerly in good circumstances, begging for bread from door to door. Meat of any kind has been a stranger to many of their mouths for months. The drought cut off what little crops they hoped to save, and they must have immediate help or perish. . .

By far the greater suffering exists among the whites. Their scanty supplies have been exhausted, and now they look to government alone for support. Some are without homes of any description. This seems strange and almost unaccountable. Yet, on one road leading to Talladega I visited four families, within fifteen minutes' ride of town, who were living in the woods, with no shelter but pine boughs, and this in mid-winter. Captain Dean, who accompanied me, assured me that upon the other roads leading into town were other families similarly situated. These people have no homes. They were widows, with large families of small children. Other families, as their provisions fail, will wander in for supplies, and I am fearful the result will be a camp of widows and orphans. If possible, it should be prevented; and yet I saw about thirty persons for whom shelter must be provided, or death will speedily follow their present exposure and suffering. . .

On the Confederate Frontier

Annual Cyclopaedia, 1865, p. 29. From the letters of Gov. Isaac Murphy of Arkansas. [December 9, 1865]

THERE are thousands suffering in Arkansas for want of food and raiment, and who, unless speedily relieved, will, in many instances, during the winter, die from the effects of hunger and cold. . .

The desolations of war in our state are beyond description. Suffering and poverty are, perhaps, more general in this than the other rebel States, from the fact that during the entire war an internal and bloody strife existed between the Union element and their rebel neighbors. . . Besides the utter desolation that marked the track of war and battle, guerrilla bands and scouting parties have pillaged almost every neighborhood north of the Arkansas River, also in the country south of the river, lying near the Indian boundary. It would be safe to say that two-thirds of the counties in the State are in destitute circumstances, and many will suffer for food and clothing this winter and spring, unless relieved by the noble kindness of the people of the Northern States.

In Sherman's Track

Annual Cyclopaedia, 1865, p. 392. By a Northern newspaper correspondent. [1865]

PASSING Marietta [Georgia], where the usual marks of destruction appeared, I was interested by the appearance of a crowd gathered about one of the few remaining business buildings. I began to make inquiries, . . . when they thronged about me and began the revelation of a degree of destitution that would draw pity from a stone.

Thomas H. Moore, of respectable and even cultured address, introduced himself as the agent for the county, appointed by the State, for the distribution of supplies voted by the rebel Legislature to the people of North Georgia, after Sherman's passage. He said all these supplies had been long ago issued. He had himself, since, walked to Atlanta (having no horse), to procure more. A few hundred pounds had been furnished, which he was now distributing, but it amounted to a mere pittance, and he was obliged to reserve it for those who are already on the verge of starvation. Women . . . hourly, come in from a distance of ten to fifteen miles afoot, leaving homes entirely destitute, in order to get a few mouthfuls to save the lives of their helpless children.

After him came slaveholders, the wealthiest in the county — one with sixty slaves, who complained that what had once made them the richest now made them the poorest. They had nothing to feed these people, without whose aid the crops could not be secured. Mr.— had told his negroes that if they would remain with him, now that they were free, he would compensate them, and share with them his lands, and they were anxious to do so; but . . . the distributing officers refused to furnish the slaveholders, who, unless they could get aid, would, together with their negroes, starve. They all told me that no man in the country had more than two bushels of corn left. . . .

The commandant has mentioned a case that occurred yesterday. A poor woman came all the way into town on foot, from a distance of twenty miles, leaving at home a family of children who had had nothing to eat for twenty-four hours. Yet the most that could be done in answer to her appeal was to request the commissary, if possible, to supply her. . . . There are 35,000 men, women, and children in the counties of Georgia, immediately surrounding Atlanta, who are dependent upon the United States Government for support and preservation from death by hunger. In the counties of North Georgia there must be at least as many more, for at every post and headquarters of the United States forces hundreds of applicants are applying daily for relief. To such an extent does this state of affairs prevail that it seriously incommodes the troops; and though every effort has been made to relieve the suffering of the people yet vast destitution prevails among them.

Bad Crops in 1865

Annual Cyclopaedia, 1865, p. 788. Description by a traveller in Texas. Over the entire South for several years crops were uniformly bad. [1865]

THE drought had nearly ruined the corn crops, and it is estimated that only one-half a crop will be made this season. The same will prove true of the potato crop. Cotton looks well, and we have been informed by all the citizens that they have never before seen such a fine and heavy yield as this season. We hear loud complaints everywhere of the scarcity of hands to pick and save it. And we saw acres of the finest cotton that ever grew dropping out of the bolls, and wasting for the want of hands to save it. The planters made contracts with their former slaves to remain with them and save the crops, but they proved unfaithful and deserted at the first opportunity. Thousands of bales of splendid cotton will be lost in Washington County by this cause, and the neighboring counties are no better off.

Government Aid to the Destitute

Annual Cyclopaedia, 1865, p. 393. A Southern reporter's account. [1865]

To get an idea of the immensity of the feeding establishments in this city [Atlanta] I will give you some items. During the month of June, there were issued to about fifteen thousand recipients: ninety-five thousand pounds of breadstuff, and the same amount of meat, together with the proper proportion of salt, coffee, sugar, soap, candles, and other articles. Since the 1st of July, the increase of recipients has been very large. A large number of refugees who are returning to their homes on Government transportation, also receive their subsistence here; and this addition has assisted very much to increase the amount of issue. . . There are employed in the issuing house about ten clerks, who are kept on the run all day, and often at night: about twenty negroes, who assuredly do not find the work of this commissary department as easy a business as working in a cornfield, especially when they are caught stealing — a piece of waggery which you know the “institution” is very fond of perpetrating. A large number of Confederate soldiers, lately discharged from Northern prisons, continue to arrive here daily, and they, too, are furnished with rations. Taking as an entire affair the business of this commissary post, it is the biggest thing I have met with in a long time. . .

I cannot help but remark that it must be a matter of gratitude as well as surprise, for our people to see a Government which was lately fighting us with fire, and sword, and shell, now generously feeding our poor and distressed. In the immense crowds which throng the distributing house I notice the mothers and fathers, and widows, and orphans of our soldiers, who fought nobly, too often to the death. . . Again, the Confederate soldier, with one leg or one arm, the crippled, maimed, and broken, and the worn and destitute men, who fought bravely their enemies then, their benefactors now, have their sacks filled and are fed.

There is much in this that takes away the bitter sting and sorrow of the past. There is more than humanity in it, on the part of the provider; and the generous conduct will go farther to heal the wounds of the nation, than all the diplomacy and political policy of tricksters and office-seekers during centuries to come.

3. CONFISCATION FRAUDS

Collecting Confederate Cotton and Taxes

Ku Klux Report, vol. i, p. 445. Letter of F. S. Lyon, formerly Confederate treasury official and member of Confederate Congress, to F. P. Blair of the Ku Klux Committee of Congress in 1871. [1865]

AFTER the armies of Generals Lee, Johnston, and Taylor had surrendered and disbanded, General Canby [commanding in the Southwest] issued a military order requiring all persons who had sold cotton to the Confederate States to surrender the same to the United States authorities, under pain of having their property confiscated to make good any failure to deliver. From this commenced a struggle for the possession of cotton which it would be difficult to describe. . . The country was suddenly filled with United States Treasury agents, or persons claiming to be such, some with and others without authority to take possession of cotton.

United States wagons, guarded by United States soldiers, roamed over the country in the day-time, and sometimes in the night-time, protecting Treasury agents, and sometimes persons not Treasury agents, in seizing cotton. Seizures were sometimes made under the pretense of enforcing General Canby's order of confiscation, and sometimes cotton was seized which had never been bargained by the semblance of any legal authority to the Confederate States. When such was the fact and the most conclusive proof was made to the chief cotton agent at Mobile, that officer would refuse to admit or reject the claim, so that his decision might be reversed at Washington, and the consequence was that the owners of the cotton had to submit to a compromise by giving up part of their cotton, and neither that part nor its proceeds, in my judgment, ever found a place in the books of the Treasury Department. It was seen from the character and conduct of the agents and pretended agents engaged in the business that plunder, and not the increase of funds in the public Treasury, was the object, and a scramble for the possession of cotton ensued in which others than cotton agents took part. The consequence was that the cotton agents, or pretended agents, backed by the military forces, obtained most of the plunder, but how much of what was obtained went into the Treasury I am not informed, but from circumstances suppose hardly one-tenth. The Treasury Department . . . made an order allowing the holders of cotton bargained to the Confederate States one-fourth of it for safely keeping it during the war and delivering it, but I have reason to believe . . . that the fact of this order was fraudulently withheld by the Treasury agent at Mobile, and that instead of complying with it he gave his assistants the one-fourth of all the cotton they obtained as compensation for their services. . . . Quite a young man, sent to this town [Demopolis, Alabama] as a cotton agent, who was without experience in business and of but little business capacity, received for about one month's services four hundred bales of cotton, worth at the time at least $80,000.

Frequent changes were made in Treasury agents. As fast as one would fill his pockets another would make his appearance equally hungry for money.

The same cotton was seized as often as two or three times. One agent would seize it and discharge it on proof; his successor would re seize it, and subject the owner to a second trial, and sometimes a third agent would come in and seize it again.

There was at the close of the war a very large amount of cotton in the country, some of which had been bargained to the Confederate States, and a good deal had not. In the scramble for it, the rights of very few were respected; no distinction was made between those who were regarded as rebels and those who were known to be Union men. Two old citizens of this county, Mr. John Collins and Gaius Whitfield, were avowed Union men and opposed to the war, from the beginning to the end of the controversy, and no favor was shown them; their cotton was seized and taken from them. . . .

At the close of the war the people were left in an impoverished condition. Their supplies were pretty well exhausted; they had nothing left but . . . their lands, some stock, and the remnant of cotton saved from the wreck of their fortunes. This cotton was subject to a discriminating tax of three cents¹ per pound, when other productions of the soil were elsewhere exempted, and the collection of the tax enforced to the last pound.

Another outrage upon the rights of the people occurred here since the war. . . The congress of the Confederate States, while that power existed, had imposed a tax-in-kind upon all provisions raised by planters and farmers — one tenth of all grain, meat, etc. After the war the collection of this tax in kind was enforced by the United States military orders in this part of the country. The agent on my plantation was notified by an officer that the tax-in-kind due from me to the extinct Confederate States amounted to over one thousand bushels of corn, some two barrels of syrup, and perhaps other small articles. These articles were demanded and paid. My nearest neighbor informed me that Government wagons went to his corn-crib and took what they regarded as his tax-in-kind, without even inviting him to see his corn measured. I heard of many other cases where this tax was demanded and collected, and believe the amount collected . . . was quite large.

While these things were going on, I represented what I considered an outrage to Governor Parsons, then the provisional governor of the State, and urged him to communicate the facts to the then commanding general at Montgomery. Governor Parsons informed me that he had complied with my request; that the general stated the collections were without his orders; that he would immediately order such collections to cease, and require proper vouchers to be given to those whose property had been taken; but such an order from the general was never made public, no vouchers were given within my knowledge, and no steps taken to arrest the enforcement of a confederate law which had died with the confederacy.

Theft and Confiscation of Cotton

Johnson MSS. (Library of Congress). Report of Sherrard Clemens from Shreveport, Louisiana. Clemens, who lived in Wheeling, West Virginia, was an agent of President Johnson. [1865]

THE state of things resulting from the acts of various local agents, has taken me utterly by surprise: and is I am bold to say, rapidly bringing the Government itself into disrepute. . .

The Agents at Memphis, Little Rock, Vicksburg and Natchez, have delegated authority before and since the 15th day of June last, to Collect Confederate Cotton, to sub-Agents, on various terms of one half, one third, and one fourth of the proceeds. The local Agent divides these proceeds with the sub-Agents, or fails to make any return to the Treasury Department at all, putting in many instances the Cotton in the hands of the factors who share the unlawful plunder.

The regular outlet for this country and Arkansas is New Orleans, but as the case now is presented, there is conflicting jurisdiction by Sub Agents, from Little Rock, Memphis, Vicksburg, Natchez, and New Orleans. The consequence is they go to remote points, call upon some post Commander for an escort of Cavalry, and seize all Cotton at accessible points, under the pretext of securing Cotton and thus defraud honest Citizens. The whole Country is therefore in a state of alarm, resulting in a feeling fatal to the organization of any civil policy at all. Many of these Sub Agents I know to be disgraced or dismissed Officers of the Army, in consequence of peculations and frauds, during the War, in this nefarious business. They and the local agents I believe have presumed upon the fact that their designs can be consummated before justice can reach them. . .

It will be far better to abolish the whole system, and leave to individual capital, Enterprise and Energy, the whole question, abandoning all hope of securing a tithe of the Vast amount of Cotton which belongs to the government. If it is to be lost at all, it better be in the hands of Capitalists who will pay for it, than to be stolen by sworn officers of the Government, who in their cupidity disgrace their profession, and show they are capable of the basest turpitude.

In confirmation, of what I say, I enclose [nine] papers. . . Mr. Little, the Agent at Vicksburg professes to be the brother in law, of the Secretary of the Treasury. If he is, I am humiliated by the fact, as his deputies here are of the most mercenary description, among whom is Gen. Hovey, of Illinois, whose history in Cotton, is now part of the public records, and who retired from the army in disgrace. . . Under the present state of things, I say in pain, that the Federal government is in utter disrepute. Under all the circumstances, perhaps the most prompt measure, will be for Major Gen. Canby, whom I know to be an honest gentleman, to assume military control and drive out all Treasury Agents, in Louisiana and Arkansas, except Mr. Jewell, who is here, and compel him to report to Mr. Flanders in New Orleans. Both of these gentlemen I believe to be beyond a bribe.

“The Government Loses in Money and Character”

Johnson MSS. H. M. Watterson to the President, from Mobile, January 29, 1866. Watterson, the father of Henry Watterson, the present editor of the Courier-Journal, was a Southern Unionist. For several months he traveled in the South as the President's agent, investigating the cotton frauds. [1866]

So many parties, official and unofficial, have been engaged in stealing cotton, I fear we can do but little more, in our hurried trip than to get on their tracks. It is clear to my mind that the Government owes it to its own character to ferret out some of the principal thieves and pursue them to conviction and punishment. A single word on another point: The time has arrived, as I think, when this Cotton business should be wound up and the entire lot of cotton agents withdrawn from the South. The subordinates under the principal agents are roving over the country and harassing the people without any corresponding benefit to the national treasury. In many instances the Government loses in money and loses in character by their operations. Upon all these matters Mr. Chandler and I will either report to you verbally or in writing.

Methods of the Treasury Agents

Report of Joint Committee on Reconstruction, part iv, p. 157. Statement of T. J. Mackay, U. S. provost marshal in Louisiana. [1866]

AFTER the arrival of the officials of the Treasury Department in western Louisiana I heard frequent complaints made of their exactions. At first I did not credit those complaints, as the office is essentially an odious one. Upon further and diligent inquiry I ascertained that it was the common practice of the agents of the Treasury Department to seize cotton on the pretext that it belonged to the late Confederate States; to refuse to give the party who owned the cotton a paper designating the weights of the bales, and consequently return to the claimant the same number of bales taken from him, after abstracting from them the third or half of the cotton. In other cases the Treasury agents would refuse to respect the permits given by their predecessors to ship cotton, but exact bribes before they would permit it to be shipped. In other cases they would refuse to give any permits whatever to ship cotton, but employed certain parties to buy it at a reduced price. For instance on the third of April last [1866] Mrs. Boyce, of Red River county, Texas, sold her four hundred bales of cotton for seventy-five dollars a bale — cotton she had raised since the surrender. She sold it at that price because it had been seized by a Treasury agent, and she could not sell it otherwise . . . two hundred dollars a bale was the market price. In another case, within the past four weeks, in Natchitoches Parish, Louisiana, a Treasury agent has been running a large steamer up and down the Red river, and refusing to give parties permits to ship cotton upon any other steamer than that one, although the law requires the agent to remain in his office and give permits to all parties where there is no evidence or ground of suspicion against the cotton. By this course he forces parties to ship their cotton on that steamer at a charge of five and six dollars a bale, while other steamers charge but three or four dollars. These acts are performed for the private advantage of the agent, and to the injury of the government, because the citizen refers the oppressive act to the government, and not to the unfaithful agent. And it becomes the pretext for turbulence and disorder.

“Mere Rogues and Fortune Hunters”

J. T. Trowbridge, The South, p. 567. Trowbridge, the well known New England author, visited in 1865 all the Southern States except Texas. [1865]

MUCH ill-feeling had been kept alive by the United States Treasury agents, searching the country for Confederate cotton and branded mules and horses. Many of these agents, . . . were mere rogues and fortune-hunters. They would propose to seize a man's property in the name of the United States, but abandon the claim on the payment of heavy bribes, which of course went into their own pockets. Sometimes, having seized “C. S. A.” cotton, they would have the marks on the bales changed, get some man to claim it, and divide with him the profits. Such practices had a pernicious effect, engendering a contempt for the government, and a murderous ill-will which too commonly vented itself upon soldiers and negroes.

To the Victors the Spoils

Whitelaw Reid, After the War, pp. 30, 46, 48.

THE practice of regarding everything left in the country as the legitimate prize to the first officer who discovers it, has led, in some cases, to performances little creditable to the national uniform. What shall be thought of the officer who, finding a fine law library, straightway packed it up and sent it to his office in the North? Or what shall be said of the taste of that other officer who, finding in an old country residence a series of family portraits, imagined that they would form very pretty parlor ornaments anywhere, and sent the entire set, embracing the ancestors of the haughty old South Carolinian for generations back, to look down from the walls of his Yankee residence? . . .

Every Northern man in Wilmington lives in the very best style the place affords, no matter how slender his visible resources. I was the guest of a civil officer whose salary cannot be over two thousand dollars. His home was a spacious three-story double structure, that would have done no discredit to Fifth Avenue. You approach it through a profusion of the rarest shrubbery; it was in the most aristocratic quarter of the city, was elegantly furnished, and filled with servants — all on two thousand dollars a year, less the Government tax. But this is modest and moderate. The officer at least made the one house serve all his purposes. Another — a colonel on duty here — is less easily satisfied. He has no family, but he finds one of the largest and best furnished double houses in the town only sufficient for his bachelor wants, as a private residence. Another house, equally spacious and eligible, is required for the use of his office! And, in general, our people seem to go upon the theory that, having conquered the country, they are entitled to the best it has, and in duty bound to use as much of it as possible. . . . The hotel keeper, for example, has returned. He finds here a yankee, who, seeing the house deserted when we occupied the city, and being told by the officials that they wanted a hotel, determined to keep it. The yankee has paid no rent; he has been at no expense, and he has made a sum reckoned at over a hundred thousand dollars, by keeping his hotel and a little cotton planting which he was able to combine with it. Naturally he is in no haste to give up his rent-free establishment, and the Rebel owner has the satisfaction of contemplating the Yankee in possession, and calculating the profits which might have gone into his own pockets but for the frantic determination, four years ago, never to submit to the tyrannical rule of the Illinois gorilla. Returning merchants find sutlers behind their counters, reckoning up gains such as the old business men of New Bern never dreamed of; all branches of trade are in the hands of Northern speculators, who followed the army; half the residences are filled with army officers, or occupied by Government civil officials, or used for negro schools, or rented out as “abandoned property.”

“Peculation, Robbing, Intrigue, Plunder”

House Ex. Doc. no. 97, 39 Cong., 2 Sess., p. 5. Report of Hugh McCulloch, Secretary of the Treasury. [1865]

CONTRACTORS, anxious for gain, were sometimes guilty of bad faith and peculation, and frequently took possession of cotton and delivered it under contracts as captured or abandoned, when in fact it was not such, and they had no right to touch it under their contracts or under the acts of Congress. Residents and others in the districts where these peculations were going on took advantage of the unsettled condition of the country, and representing themselves as agents of this department, went about robbing under such pretended authority, and thus added to the difficulties of the situation by causing unjust opprobrium and suspicion to rest upon officers engaged in the faithful discharge of their duties. Agents . . . frequently received or collected property, and sent it forward, which the law did not authorize them to take. . . Lawless men, singly and in organized bands, engaged in general plunder; every species of intrigue and peculation and theft were resorted to.

4. THE COTTON TAX

The Injustice of the Tax

Senate Misc. Doc. no. 109, 39 Cong., 1 Sess. The following Memorial of the New York Chamber of Commerce to Congress summarizes the Southern objections to the cotton tax. [May 15, 1866]

IF measures are to be adopted affecting the industries of a large section and of a numerous people, these measures should be characterized by a spirit of generosity, which will take the sting from the declaration that "taxation without representation is tyranny." It should appear in after years, when prosperity in the south takes the place of present adversity, and fraternal relations are again restored in and out of Congress, that in the days of her weakness the north and west did not take undue advantage of the south, discriminating against her industry, and imposing burdens too heavy to be borne; but, on the contrary, that a spirit of magnanimity ruled in the councils of the nation, disposing our legislators to deal generously with the people of the south, thus to aid in restoring them from a state of weakness to a condition of strength. . .

At this very time, when [the Southern farmer] is struggling for existence, a tax of five cents per pound is proposed, which being practically an export duty, is equivalent to charging him with that amount for the purpose of paying it over to the cultivators of India, Egypt, and Brazil. And still it is expected he is to compete successfully with those growers.

There is in these and other modifications suggested in the existing law a want of impartiality which, in the judgment of the committee, is calculated to provoke hostility at the south, and to excite in all honest minds at the north the hope that such a purpose will not prevail. It is not as though the people of the south were prepared to enter into competition with the manufacturers of the north for the benefit to be conferred through the payment of the proposed bounty on cotton goods exported. They are not and cannot be for years to come; and the imposition of a discriminating tax which tends to make the rich of the north richer and the poor of the south poorer operates as a discouragement to those who, with heavy hearts but honest endeavor, strive to regain their lost fortunes.

The Committee feel that it would be wiser and better to lift up those who are now cast down, and by just and generous legislation to inspire the southern people with hope of better days rather than by an opposite course to prolong the era of political and commercial distrust.

A Petition for Relief

Acts of Alabama. 1872, p. 455. Resolutions passed by a Reconstructionist legislature. [1865-1868]

THE tax upon cotton levied and collected by the government of the United States during the years 1865, 1866 and 1867 was in our judgment most unjust and oppressive to the people of the cotton growing States, in that it was a direct tax upon industry, and imposed upon them at a time when they were prostrated and impoverished by war and the attendant consequences; . . . we believe the refunding of this tax, an unequal tax, levied as it was on the industry of a majority of the States, to be only a matter of even-handed but tardy justice to those with whom the people of this State are identified, as well by ties of blood as common interest.

5. THE SOUTHERN UNIONIST PROBLEM

Johnson MSS. M.— Le B— to Andrew Johnson. [October 1, 1865]

HAVING watched with the most intense interest, your course in regard to two of Satan's ambassadors to earth, Robert E. Lee and Jefferson Davis, and being very much dissatisfied with the disposition made of the former, I have concluded to tell you what to do. Aren't you ashamed to give Lee the privilege of being a President of a college? Satan wouldn't have him to open the door for fresh arrivals, and you have pardoned him, and allowed him to take a position of the greatest responsibility. I hope you may have cause to repent that act in sackcloth and ashes. May the spirits of the dead heroes of America haunt you ever as a punishment for the cowardly neglect of duty. If you do not have Jeff. Davis hanged, may the anathemas of a Nation rest upon you! You remember how you spoke to that traitor in the Senate. Dare you fulfill that threat? The eyes of the world are upon you—it is yours to write your name upon the hearts of the million or cover it with the deepest infamy. Dare to do right and avoid being hissed through the world as a man destitute of moral courage. I have said what I desired to say. If you do not do your duty you will be tormented through a never ending eternity by lost souls of your Southern friends.

Proscription of Unionists in Tennessee

Report of Joint Committee on Reconstruction, part 1, pp. 92, 109.

THE predominant feeling of those lately in rebellion is that of deep-seated hatred, amounting in many cases to a spirit of revenge towards the white Unionists of the State, and a haughty contempt for the negro, whom they cannot treat as a freeman. The hatred for the white loyalists is intensified by the accusation that he deserted the South in her extremity, and is, therefore, a traitor, and by the setting up a government of the minority. The spirit of revenge is called forth by the attempt to disfranchise them, and by the retaliatory acts of the returned soldiers for wrongs done them during the war. . .

The tourist would not be apt to detect the true state of the southern temper. Even the resident observer has to look beneath the surface of insincere protestations of loyalty. True, the traveller or visitor might observe a large number of daily rebel newspapers well sustained, while a single loyal paper is sustained with difficulty. He might discover that the rebel merchant or lawyer is full of business and growing rich, while the loyalist either fails, or is driven to pander and dissimulate. And he may find that the rebel chaplain preaches to overflowing houses, while the loyal minister is in truth a missionary in an unfriendly country. But he will hardly go into the social circle to learn that the Union man is not admitted into society, or into private families, to find that hatred of the Yankee and contempt for the government are inculcated by rebel ministers and teachers; nor will he visit the township election to learn that the bushwhacker and guerilla can defeat the most respectable Union man for constable or justice of the peace; or to the courts, to learn that the despised "Lincolnite" fails to get justice at the hands of a rebel jury. . .

A party exists in the State, which is every day becoming more and more compact and powerful, which sympathizes with the men and principles of the rebellion. It commands every agency to operate upon public opinion. It has five well-sustained and ably-edited daily papers in Memphis, four in Nashville, and one in Knoxville, and a weekly in each of the important villages. Their pardoned but talented and still popular leaders are still with them. Hundreds of rebel ministers who glory in having led off in the rebellion, and who have been throughout the war the bloodiest-minded men in the south, are still in the confidence of their people. All these mould public sentiment as they please, and command a party of over two-thirds of the white men of the State. Free from restrictions upon suffrage, they will probably cast 90,000 votes. . .

It is a sad delusion and a dangerous mistake to suppose that this hatred of loyalty, contempt for the negro, and alienation from the government, are confined to the politicians, or leaders as they are termed, and that the common people have been all the time loyal. It is certainly true that a portion of the southern people went into the rebellion reluctantly, and that a few were actually forced into it. But it is equally true that nine-tenths of those who went in reluctantly came out the bitterest of rebels. . . Long before the war the common laborer had learned to curse the Yankees and abolitionists. . . Filled with murderous hate, they have fought four years against their country. They have denounced and heard it denounced with every breath. They have suffered cold, hunger, and wounds in an effort to destroy it. They have slain its defenders, and seen their comrades fall in the same cause. The laws of human nature forbid the idea that they love their country. Indeed, it may well be doubted whether the capacity for patriotism is not extinguished in many of them.

[Statement of Gen. George H. Thomas]. Middle Tennessee is disturbed by personal animosities and hatreds, much more than it is by the disloyalty of persons towards the government of the United States. Those personal animosities would break out and overawe the civil authorities, but for the presence there of the troops of the United States. In West Tennessee these personal animosities exist even more strongly than they do in Middle Tennessee, and there is less loyalty in West Tennessee than there is in Middle Tennessee. But the people of Tennessee desire very much, it is their strongest desire, to be back in the government of the United States. Still, while they wish to enjoy the rights of citizenship, they are not friendly towards Union men, particularly men from Tennessee who have been in the Union army. They are more unfriendly to Union men, natives of the State of Tennessee, or of the south, who have been in the Union army, than they are to men of northern birth.

John Minor Botts on the Southern Situation

Report of Joint Committee on Reconstruction, part ii, p. 120. Botts was a noted Unionist of Virginia. [1866]

AT the time of the surrender of General Lee's army and the restoration of peace I think there was, not only a general but an almost universal, acquiescence and congratulation among the people that the war had terminated, and a large majority of them were at least contented. . . . But from the time that Mr. Johnson commenced his indiscriminate system of pardoning all who made application, . . . they became bold, insolent, and defiant; and this was increased to a very large extent by the permission which was, immediately after the evacuation of Richmond, given by General Patrick, the democratic copperhead provost marshal of the army of the Potomac, to the original conductors of the public press before the rebellion to re-establish their papers, . . . without restriction or limitation; . . . since which time, . . . the spirit of disloyalty and disaffection has gone on increasing day by day, and hour by hour, until among the leaders generally there is as much disaffection and disloyalty as there was any time during the war, and a hundredfold more than there was immediately after the evacuation and the surrender of the army. This is the conclusion to which my mind has been brought by the licentiousness of the press, and by communications which are made to me from all parts of the state, either verbally or by letter, from the most prominent and reliable Union sources. If I were to judge from anything I have ever heard personally from these gentlemen, I should not think there was any very great difference between their loyalty and yours or mine; but I hear of it elsewhere, and I see evidence of it daily, not only in the public press, but in the proceedings of the so-called legislature of the State. . . . I give you the following extract of a letter from a prominent Union man of the State: . . .

"I have no hopes of future loyalty unless the President and Congress can relieve the masses of the political incubus now weighing them to the ground. Hour after hour the democracy here are becoming more bold, more insolent, more proscriptive.

Was the war in all its horrid consequences designed to establish a democratic oligarchy here in the south and eventually turn over the general government with all its patronage and power to this pack of bloodhounds? Or was it designed to preserve the Union, maintain liberty, and wipe out forever all sectional parties? If for the former, then the prevailing policy will soon effect it; and when it does, I pray that God will cause a universal earthquake and blot out that portion of his footstool comprised within the United States. Under democratic rule again, hell would be a garden of Eden compared to the Southern States, and I should assuredly select it as a permanent place of abode if forced to choose between the two."

Treatment of the "Truly Loyal"

Report of Joint Committee on Reconstruction, part iii, p. 11. Testimony of William H. Smith, of Alabama, who opposed secession, became a Confederate judge, and later deserted. First "scalawag" governor of Alabama. [1866]

I WAS originally a Union man, and refused to take any part in the rebellion; stood out against it until I was compelled to leave home. . . [The Southern people] manifest the most perfect contempt for a man who is known to be an unequivocal Union man; call him a "galvanized yankee,"¹ and apply other terms and epithets to him. In travelling on the cars you can hear such language used every day by people; or I can where I am not known. Where I am known personally they avoid the use of such language, generally; but I very frequently hear it where I am not known.

Persecution of Confederates by Unionists

J. T. Trowbridge, The South, p. 240. [1865]

I WAS sorry to find the fires of these old feuds still burning [in Tennessee]; The State Government was in the hands of Union men, and Rebels and refugees from the Union army were disfranchised. Secessionists, who assisted at the hanging and robbing of Union men, and burned their houses, were receiving just punishment for their crimes in the civil courts and at the hands of the sheriff. This was well; and it should have been enough. But those who had suffered so long and so cruelly at the hands of their enemies did not think so. Returning Rebels were robbed; and if one had stolen back unawares to his home, it was not safe for him to remain there. I saw in Virginia one of these exiles, who told me how homesickly he pined for the hills and meadows of East Tennessee, which he thought the most delightful region in the world. But there was a rope hanging from a tree for him there, and he dared not go back. "The bottom rails are on top," said he: "that is the trouble." The Union element, and the worst part of the Union element, was uppermost. There was some truth in this statement. It was not the respectable farming class, but the roughs, who kept the old fires blazing. Many secessionists and Union men, who had been neighbors before the war, were living side by side again, in as friendly relations as ever.

1. The term "galvanized yankee" was applied to a Confederate who went over to the other side.

Time the Only Cure

Report of Joint Committee on Reconstruction, part ii, p. 93. Testimony of Robert McCurdy, a Unionist clergyman, then in Virginia. [1865]

IF they could secure their independence, I do not think there is any doubt at all about the course they would take. I think they would do anything in the world by which that could be secured. I do not think, however, that the southern people have any idea that there is any possibility, even the remotest, of anything occurring through which they can do anything but submit. I think it is universally the feeling that there is no hope and no help for them in this regard. Physically, they are perfectly humbled. It is impossible to make their physical humiliation more complete than it is. A lady recently remarked to a friend of mine, "You cannot expect us to treat the northern people well who come here, or to have any intercourse with them. They have humiliated us, and we cannot buy, or sell, or have any intercourse with them." I can see no hope of an improvement in that respect except by the gradual operation of those causes which are above all opposition — commercial causes, the operation of trade, the demand for capital to come from the north, the emigration of persons from the north moving southward, the moving of southern people to distant points and colonizing and getting into new scenes and under new circumstances. I look for the gradual operation of these causes. I do not see why the south should witness any different results than those which Italy witnessed in the case of her northern conquerors, and which England witnessed in the case of the Normans. . . The people of the south esteem themselves a superior people. Northern men going among them with more activity, more business relations, with less luxury, will control in some departments; and there will be dissimilarity until time and the various causes, that are operating in spite of everything, produce homogeneity. There is no miracle to be wrought in this case. Time and nature's laws, not mere legislation of any kind, can effect it. There must be patient waiting. If I were a secessionist; if I had gone with the people of the south; if I had taken the same view of matters which they took; if my judgment, conviction, and conscience had not been all against them; if my church education and my education by my forefathers had not influenced me against them; if, in short, I had taken the course they adopted, I would do just precisely as they are doing; if it were a matter of principle, I should, of course, abide by the principle, and should esteem it something more than even dollars and cents, and political power, and home, and everything else. . .

All they can effect politically, socially, and ecclesiastically, they will. They have no more use for bullets. They henceforth use the social, the ecclesiastical, and the political ballot.

6. NORTHERN MEN IN THE SOUTH

Feeling toward Northern People

Senate Ex. Doc. no. 2, 39 Cong., 1 Sess., p. 7. From Report of Carl Schurz to President Johnson. [1865]

BUT no instance has come to my notice in which the people of a city or a rural district cordially fraternized with the army. Here and there the soldiers were welcomed as protectors against apprehended dangers; but general exhibitions of cordiality on the part of the population I have not heard of. There are, indeed, honorable individual exceptions to this rule. Many persons . . . are honestly striving to soften down the bitter feelings and traditional antipathies of their neighbors; others, who are acting more upon motives of policy than inclination, maintain pleasant relations with the officers of the government. But, upon the whole, the soldier of the Union is still looked upon as a stranger, an intruder — as the “Yankee.” “the enemy.” . . . The existence and intensity of this aversion is too well known to those who have served or are now serving in the south to require proof. . .

This feeling of aversion and resentment with regard to our soldiers may, perhaps, be called natural. The animosities inflamed by a four years' war, and its distressing incidents, cannot be easily overcome. But they extend beyond the limits of the army, to the people of the north. I have read in southern papers bitter complaints about the unfriendly spirit exhibited by the northern people. . . . But, as far as my experience goes, the “unfriendly spirit” exhibited in the north is all mildness and affection compared with the popular temper which in the south vents itself in a variety of ways and on all possible occasions. No observing northern man can come into contact with the different classes composing southern society without noticing it. He may be received in social circles with great politeness, even with apparent cordiality; but soon he will become aware that, although he may be esteemed as a man, he is detested as a “Yankee,” . . . the word “Yankee” still signifies to them those traits of character which the southern press has been so long in the habit of attributing to northern people; and whenever they look around them upon the traces of the war, they see in them not the consequences of their own folly, but the evidence of "Yankee wickedness." . . .

Treatment of Northern Men

Senate Ex. Doc. no. 43, 39 Cong., 1 Sess. Report of B. C. Truman to the President. Truman was a New Englander who served during the war as a staff officer. After the war he was one of the President's secretaries and was sent to investigate conditions in the South. [1866]

THERE is a prevalent disposition not to associate too freely with northern men, or to receive them into the circles of society; but it is far from insurmountable. Over southern society, as over every other, woman reigns supreme, and they are more imbittered against those whom they deem the authors of all their calamities than are their brothers, sons and husbands. It is a noteworthy ethnological fact, and one I have often observed, that of the younger generation the southern women are much superior to the southern men both in intellect and energy; and their ascendancy over society is correspondingly great. However this disparity is to be accounted for, whether by the enormous wastage of the war among the males, or otherwise, it nevertheless exists, and to its existence is greatly due the exclusiveness of southern society.

But the stories and rumors to the effect that northern men are bitterly persecuted and compelled to abandon the country, I pronounce false. If northern men go south they must expect for a while to be treated with neglect, and sometimes with contempt; but if they refrain from bitter political discussions, and conduct themselves with ordinary discretion, they soon overcome these prejudices and are treated with respect. The accounts that are from time to time flooded over the country in regard to southern cruelty and intolerance toward northerners are mostly false. I could select many districts, however, particularly in northern Texas and portions of Mississippi, where the northern men could not at present live with any degree of self-respect. There are also localities in many of the southern States where it would be dangerous for a northern man to live, but they are exceptional, and are about equally unsafe for any man who possesses attractive property. For some unknown cause a large number of persons are engaged in writing and circulating falsehoods. For some unpatriotic purpose or other, reports of an incendiary character concerning the southern people are transmitted north. To learn the falseness of these reports one needs only to obtain the facts. I am personally acquainted with most of the officers of a hundred-odd regiments of volunteers, and out of these I could name thirty regiments one-half of whose officers and many of the men have returned to the south, and as many more that have left large numbers there upon being disbanded. Hundreds, . . . of the officers of colored regiments — the most offensive to the south — have remained there and entered into business. . . . Large numbers of ex-federal and ex-confederate officers are engaged together in mercantile pursuits and in cotton-planting. Nearly all of the cotton plantations in Florida are being run by such parties. The banks of the Mississippi are lined with plantations which have been leased by northern men and federal officers. Arkansas and White river plantations are generally being run by officers who have served under General Reynolds, while a large number of the Red river plantations have been placed under cultivation by ex-officers of General A. J. Smith's command. Fourteen officers of a colored (Kentucky) regiment are engaged in planting and raising cotton near Victoria, Texas. The First National Bank of Texas, at Galveston, has for president ex-Major General Nichols, of the late confederate army, and ten of its directors are also ex-rebel officers, while the cashier is ex-Major General Clark, of the Union army, and who formerly commanded a division of colored troops. In all of these connections the utmost harmony prevails. Notwithstanding the above facts — and I could multiply them — I maintain that in many sections of the south there is a wide-spread hostility to northern men, which, however, in nine cases out of ten, is speedily dispelled by individual contact, and the exercise of a generous regard for private opinions. . . All who can be spared from the industry of the north to go south can readily find places of business where they can live in quiet and prosperity.

7. THE GARRISONS

Negro Troops in South Carolina

Annual Cyclopaedia, 1865, p. 759. Governor Perry's address to the South Carolina Convention. [1865]

It is a source of congratulation to know that the colored troops whose atrocious conduct has disgraced the service and filled the public mind with the most horrible apprehensions, have been withdrawn from the interior of the State, and are to be placed in garrisons on the coast, where they can do no further mischief. . . The white troops are, . . doing their duty beneficially to the country, in preserving the peace and good order of the State. It is thought that their presence among us for sometime yet will be necessary, in order to enforce the relative duties of the freedmen and their employers.

"A Horde of Barbarians"

MS. Letter. Gen. Wade Hampton to President Johnson. [1866]

THE very first act of peace consisted in pouring into our whole country a horde of barbarians — your brutal negro troops under their no less brutal and more degraded Yankee officers. Every license was allowed to these wretches and the grossest outrages were committed by them with impunity. Their very presence amongst us at such a time was felt as a direct and premeditated insult to the whole Southern people. Confederate soldiers returning home, weary and travel-stained, were seized by these negro soldiers, and the buttons of that grey jacket, under which was beating as heroic and as patriotic a heart as ever gave its all to a bleeding country — were roughly and ignominiously torn off. No armed foe being in the field, the great armies of the North waged active and honorable warfare against Confederate grey and its brass buttons. Noble occupation for brave soldiers — it at least brought them into nearer contact with these hated emblems of Southern soldiery than they had ventured to assume during the past four years. These proceedings, however, were merely galling and irritating, not calculated perhaps, to conciliate the South, or to evoke "loyalty," brotherly love or intense devotion to the "Stars and Stripes." But there were not wanting other and darker features to fill up the gloomy canvass. Let me mention one case, not because it was an isolated one, for it was not, but because it shows with what perfect impunity the most horrible crimes could be and were committed by the black devils who were charged with the preservation of peace and the maintenance of order in the South. A brave and gallant Confederate soldier, whilst walking in the streets of Columbus, Miss., was fired at by a Federal soldier. He promptly returned the fire, killing the man who so wantonly assailed him. He was instantly surrounded by negro soldiers, who beat him severely and wounded him. The Federal officers ordered him taken to a hospital, which was done, though he requested to be carried to his own home where he could receive the attention he needed. Whilst in the hospital, a prisoner guarded by Federal soldiers, he was bayoneted to death.

"Outrageous Exercise of Tyranny"

Reid, After the War, p. 422. Quoted from a New Orleans newspaper.

OUR citizens who had been accustomed to meet and treat the negroes only as respectful servants, were mortified, pained, and shocked to encounter them in towns and villages, and on the public roads, by scores and hundreds and thousands, wearing Federal uniforms, and bearing bright muskets and gleaming bayonets. They often recognized among them those who had once been their own servants. They were jostled from the side-walks by dusky guards, marching four abreast. They were halted, in rude and sullen tones by negro sentinels, in strong contrast with the kind and fraternal hail of the old sentinels in threadbare gray or dilapidated homespun. The ladies of villages so guarded ceased to appear on the streets, and it was with much reluctance that the citizens of the surrounding country went to town on imperative errands. All felt the quartering of negro guards among them to be a deliberate, wanton, cruel act of insult and oppression. Their hearts sickened under what they deemed an outrageous exercise of tyranny. They would have received white troops, not indeed with rejoicing, but with kindness, satisfaction and respect; but when they saw their own slaves freed, armed, and put on guard over them, they treated all hope of Federal magnanimity or justice as an idle dream.

Acts of Alabama, 1865-66, p. 602. Memorial of Alabama legislature to the President. [January 16, 1866]

THE continued presence of the troops of the Federal army, however orderly and respectful in their deportment, is a constant source of irritation to the people . . . and has doubtless provoked at various times unpleasant collisions. . . . The recurrence of this evil may be safely anticipated as long as the Federal garrisons are quartered among us. Many of these troops are either garrisoned, or occasionally quartered, in neighborhoods and localities remote from safe lines of transportation, and are therefore compelled to subsist their stock upon the country. In consequence of an unprecedented scarcity of provisions, and the amount of indigence and destitution which must necessarily be provided for, an extreme hardship is thereby imposed upon the people. The freedmen of the State, the great majority of whom are under contracts for labor for the present year, yielding to the natural credulity characteristic of the race, cherish the belief that their idleness, violation of contracts, and insubordination are indirectly countenanced by the soldiers, and more especially by the colored portions of them. A vague and indefinite idea pervades the masses of freedmen, that at the expiration of the present year a general division of property will be made among them. It is believed that this state of mind is produced by their frequent intercourse and association with the colored troops. . . . While this groundless and ridiculous delusion continues, the agricultural and industrial interests of the State must suffer, while at the same time the evils and horrors of domestic insurrection may be reasonably anticipated.

8. THE TEMPER OF THE SOUTHERN WHITES

Johnson MSS., H. M. Watterson to President Johnson. Dispatch No. 10. [October 30, 1865]

HISTORY records no such a spectacle as is now exhibited in the Southern States. After a four years war, which was inaugurated for the purpose of cutting loose from the Government established by their fathers, the Southern people have suddenly laid down their arms and given unmistakable evidence of a determination to renew in good faith their former relations. . . The voice of every good man, within the eleven states lately in rebellion, is raised in behalf of peace and reunion under the Stars and Stripes. This fact is manifest to all, whether citizens or soldiers, who desire to know and proclaim the truth. The man who gainsays it, either knows not what he is talking about, or he has some selfish purpose to accomplish by wilful misrepresentation.

Gen. Steadman has been here, and he authorized me to say to the President . . . that, in his judgment, the necessity for military rule in Georgia has passed and so soon as civil government is re-established in the State the troops ought to be withdrawn.

General Grant's Observations

Senate Ex. Doc. no. 2, 39 Cong., 1 Sess., p. 107. General Grant to President Johnson, after a trip in the South. [December 18, 1865]

I AM satisfied that the mass of thinking men of the south accept the present situation of affairs in good faith. The question which has heretofore divided the sentiment of the people of the two sections — Slavery and State rights, or the right of a State to secede from the Union — they regard as having been settled forever by the highest tribunal — arms — that man can resort to. I was pleased to learn from the leading men whom I met that they not only accepted the decision arrived at as final, but, now that the smoke of the battle was cleared away and time has been given for reflection, that this decision has been a fortunate one for the whole country, they receiving like benefits from it with those who opposed them in the field and in council.

Four years of war, during which law was executed only at the point of the bayonet throughout the States in rebellion, have left the people possibly in a condition not to yield that ready obedience to civil authority the American people have generally been in the habit of yielding. This would render the presence of small garrisons throughout these States necessary until such time as labor returns to its proper channel, and civil authority is fully established. I did not meet any one, either those holding place under the government or citizens of the southern States, who think it practicable to withdraw the military from the South at present. The white and the black mutually require the protection of the general government.

There is such universal acquiescence in the authority of the general government throughout the portions of country visited by me, that the mere presence of a military force, without regard to numbers, is sufficient to maintain order. The good of the country, and economy, require that the force kept in the interior, where there are many freedmen, (elsewhere in the southern States than at forts upon the seacoast no force is necessary,) should all be white troops. The reasons for this are obvious without mentioning many of them. The presence of black troops, lately slaves, demoralizes labor, both by their advice and by furnishing in their camps a resort for the freedmen for long distances around. White troops generally excite no opposition, and therefore a small number of them can maintain order in a given district. Colored troops must be kept in bodies sufficient to defend themselves. It is not the thinking men who would use violence toward any class of troops sent among them by the general government, but the ignorant in some places might; and the late slave seems to be imbued with the idea that the property of his late master should, by right, belong to him, or at least should have no protection from the colored soldier. There is a danger of collision being brought on by such causes.

My observations lead me to the conclusion that the citizens of the southern States are anxious to return to self-government, within the Union, as soon as possible; that whilst reconstructing they want and require protection from the government; that they are in earnest in wishing to do what they think is required by the government, not humiliating to them as citizens, and that if such a course were pointed out they would pursue it in good faith. It is to be regretted that there cannot be a greater commingling, at this time, between the citizens of the two sections, and particularly of those intrusted with the law-making power.

Carl Schurz on Conditions in the South

Senate Ex. Doc. no. 2. 39 Cong., 1 Sess., p. 5. From Schurz's report to President Johnson. In regard to the Southern question Schurz was considered a radical. [1865]

I MAY group the southern people into four classes, each of which exercise an influence upon the development of things in that section:

1. Those who, although having yielded submission to the national government only when obliged to do so, have a clear perception of the irreversible change produced by the war, and honestly endeavor to accommodate themselves to the new order of things. Many of them are not free from traditional prejudice but open to conviction, and may be expected to act in good faith whatever they do. This class is composed, in its majority, of persons of mature age — planters, merchants, and professional men; some of them are active in the reconstruction movement, but boldness and energy are, with a few individual exceptions, not among their distinguishing qualities.

2. Those whose principal object is to have the States without delay restored to their position and influence in the Union and the people of the States to the absolute control of their home concerns. They are ready, in order to attain that object, to make any ostensible concession that will not prevent them from arranging things to suit their taste as soon as that object is attained. This class comprises a considerable number, probably a large majority, of the professional politicians who are extremely active in the reconstruction movement. They are loud in their praise of the President's reconstruction policy, and clamorous for the withdrawal of the federal troops and the abolition of the Freedmen's Bureau.

3. The incorrigibles, who still indulge in the swagger which was so customary before and during the war, and still hope for a time when the southern confederacy will achieve its independence. This class consists mostly of young men, and comprises the loiterers of the towns and the idlers of the country. They persecute Union men and negroes whenever they can do so with impunity, insist clamorously upon their "rights," and are extremely impatient of the presence of the federal soldiers. A good many of them have taken the oaths of allegiance and amnesty, and associated themselves with the second class in their political operations. This element is by no means unimportant; it is strong in numbers, deals in brave talk, addresses itself directly and incessantly to the passions and prejudices of the masses, and commands the admiration of the women.

4. The multitude of people have no definite ideas about the circumstances under which they live and about the course they have to follow; whose intellects are weak, but whose prejudices and impulses are strong, and who are apt to be carried along by those who know how to appeal to the latter.

Much depends upon the relation and influence of these classes. . . . But whatever their differences may be, on one point they are agreed: further resistance to the power of the national government is useless, and submission to its authority a matter of necessity. It is true, the right of secession in theory is still believed in by most of those who formerly believed in it; some are still entertaining a vague hope of seeing it realized at some future time, but all give it up as a practical impossibility for the present. All movements in favor of separation from the Union have, therefore, been practically abandoned, and resistance to our military forces, on that score, has ceased. The demonstrations of hostility to the troops and other agents of the government, which are still occurring in some localities, and of which I shall speak hereafter, spring from another class of motives. This kind of loyalty, however, which is produced by the irresistible pressure of force, and consists merely in the non-commission of acts of rebellion, is of a negative character, and might as such, hardly be considered independent of circumstances and contingencies. . .

Treason does, under existing circumstances, not appear odious in the south. The people are not impressed with any sense of its criminality. . . There is, as yet, among the southern people an utter absence of national feeling. I made it a business, while in the south, to watch the symptoms of "returning loyalty" as they appeared not only in private conversation, but in the public press and in the speeches delivered and the resolutions passed at Union meetings. Hardly ever was there an expression of hearty attachment to the great republic, or an appeal to the impulses of patriotism; but whenever submission to the national authority was declared and advocated, it was almost uniformly placed upon two principal grounds: That under present circumstances, the southern people could "do no better;" and then that submission was the only means by which they could rid themselves of the federal soldiers and obtain once more control of their own affairs. . .

One of the greatest drawbacks under which the southern people are laboring is, that for fifty years they have been in no sympathetic communion with the progressive ideas of the times. . . The southern people honestly maintained and believed, not only that as a people they were highly civilized, but that their civilization was the highest that could be attained, and ought to serve as a model to other nations, the world over. The more enlightened individuals among them felt sometimes a vague impression of the barrenness of their mental life, and the barbarous peculiarities of their social organization; but very few ever dared to investigate and to expose the true cause of these evils. Thus the people were so wrapt up in self-admiration as to be inaccessible to the voice even of the best-intentioned criticism. Hence the delusion they indulged in as to the absolute superiority of their race — a delusion which in spite of the severe test it has lately undergone, is not yet given up; and will, as every traveller in the South can testify from experience, sometimes express itself in singular manifestations. This spirit, which for so long a time has kept the southern people back while the world besides was moving, is even at this moment still standing as a serious obstacle in the way of progress. . .

If nothing were necessary but to restore the machinery of government in the States lately in rebellion in point of form, the movements made to that end by the people of the South might be considered satisfactory. But if it is required that the southern people should also accommodate themselves to the results of the war in point of spirit, those movements fall far short of what must be insisted upon.

The loyalty of the masses and most of the leaders of the southern people, consists in submission to necessity. There is, except in individual instances, an entire absence of that national spirit which forms the basis of true loyalty and patriotism.

The emancipation of the slaves is submitted to only in so far as chattel slavery in the old form could not be kept up. But although the freedman is no longer considered the property of the individual master, he is considered the slave of society, and all independent State legislation will share the tendency to make him such. . .

The solution of the problem would be very much facilitated by enabling all the loyal and free labor elements in the south to exercise a healthy influence upon legislation. It will hardly be possible to secure the freedmen against oppressive class legislation and private persecution, unless he be endowed with a certain measure of political power. . .

I desire not to be understood as saying that there are no well-meaning men among those who were compromised in the rebellion. There are many, but neither their number nor their influence is strong enough to control the manifest tendency of the popular spirit. There are great reasons for hope that a determined policy on the part of the national government will produce innumerable and valuable conversions. This consideration counsels lenity as to persons such as is demanded by the humane and enlightened spirit of our times, and vigor and firmness in the carrying out of principles, such as is demanded by the national sense of justice and the exigencies of our situation.

Popular Sentiment in the South

Senate Ex. Doc. no. 43, 39 Cong., 1 Sess., p. 4. Report of B. C. Truman to President Johnson. [April 9, 1866]

THE opinion has gained wide-spread acceptance in the north, through the medium of letter-writers, southern editorials, and other vehicles of rumor and information, that the south is to-day more disloyal towards the government than at the conclusion of the war. Various reasons are urged to account for this, chief among which is that this people have been brought to this state by an ill-timed, ill-advised leniency. What are the facts? When the war ended, it left the south prostrated, stricken, helpless. Even many of the most intelligent looked for general confiscation, proscription, and the reign of the scaffold; the news of the successive surrender of those armies that they had looked upon as standing alone between themselves and the direct calamities of history, threw the minds of the people into a state of the most abject terror. For many days, and even weeks — so I have been informed — in a thousand instances, the wretched, frightened women and children, deprived of their former protectors, lived in a state of the most fearful suspense, in hourly apprehension of the beginning of all that their frightful imaginations, and those of their editors, had been able to conceive of northern vandalism and hideous butchery. The old men and the youths, and even the adult citizens, shared largely in this “fearful looking for of judgment.” . . . This feeling, however, almost immediately after passed away, and the continued delay of anticipated retribution restored them to their wonted equanimity. Immediately succeeding this there sprang up what many conscientious people are prone to term an increase of disloyalty. But was it such? I give it another solution. What, then, is the sentiment that has inspired these noisy and reckless utterances of late, which have given so much color to the charge? It is simply the returning wave that followed the depression of defeat — the inevitable and wholesome reaction from despair. It was to have been expected, and in my humble opinion could not well have been avoided, and is not indicative of any deep-seated malady, but rather the contrary. . . The boisterous demagogues, and especially the reckless editors, . . . were for the moment appalled and stricken dumb in the presence of the gigantic calamity that had overtaken them, and in the near prospect of impending ruin; but soon they became reassured by the moderation of the government, and finding their lives still in their hands, have not ceased to pour forth those obnoxious utterances which are taken as evidence and proof of an increase of disloyalty. It is with diffidence, that I venture to dissent from the published opinions of many distinguished witnesses who have taken this view, but I am free to declare my firm conviction that it is altogether superficial and not founded in fact.

It is my belief that the south — the great, substantial, and prevailing element — is more loyal now than it was at the end of the war — more loyal to-day than yesterday, and that it will be more loyal to-morrow than to-day. . . Just as certainly as for four years the mass of popular sentiment in the south was slowly solidifying and strengthening in favor of the bogus confederacy, just so certain it is that from the date of its downfall that opinion has been slowly returning to its old attachments. For many years the dream of independence had been increasingly cherished and nurtured in the breasts of thousands; for four years that dream was a living fact, penetrating the consciousness of all, and receiving the sympathies of scarcely less than all; and then came the sudden and appalling crash — the awakening from this dream to the unwelcome but inexorable truth that the pleasing vision had vanished. As weeks, months, and years steadily accumulate, and the remembrances of that brief happiness vanish in the distance, the yearning for it will grow weak and inconstant. That dream will never be revived, in my opinion — never; and if I am satisfied of anything in relation to the south, it is that the great majority of its leading men have forever renounced all expectations of a separate nationality.

Historical Societies and Rebellion

Report of Joint Committee on Reconstruction, part iii, p. 123.
Statement of General B. H. Grierson, U. S. Army. [1866]

I BELIEVE that there is an organization existing now throughout the south for the renewal of the rebellion. Many circumstances or things which have occurred since the surrender make me believe so. I have a statement from a reliable man that one of the present State representatives of Alabama said that an organization did exist throughout the whole south for that purpose, and I learned from other parties that the "Historical Society" has something to do with it. You may have observed notices of very large attendances at Historical Society meetings in Georgia and Alabama.

The Deceitful Southerners

Report of Joint Committee on Reconstruction, part iv, p. 5. Statement of a Northern government official in Florida. [1866]

THE only way for this government to make these people its friends is just to keep them down. They have more respect for a man who goes there and shows decision than they do for one who is wavering. . . I would pin them down at the point of the bayonet so close that they would not have room to wiggle, and allow intelligent colored people to go up and vote in preference to them. The only Union element in the south proper, among the original inhabitants, is among the colored people. The whites will treat you very kindly to your face, but they are deceitful. I have often thought, and so expressed myself, that there is so much deception among the people of the south since the rebellion, that if an earthquake should open and swallow them up, I was fearful the devil would be dethroned and some of them take his place.

Good Advice to the Southern People

D. S. Walker of Florida. [1866]

LET us constantly remember that every lawless act any individual in our State may commit, and every indiscreet expression that may be uttered, is immediately exaggerated and published broadcast over the Northern States with the view of making it appear that the President is wrong and his enemies are right. . . The eyes of the world are upon us. Let us therefore, be wise as serpents, and harmless as doves. In times like these, it is the duty of every good citizen not only to obey the Constitution and laws himself, but to see as far as possible that every one else does so, for each now is held responsible for all, and all are held responsible for each. Therefore I charge not only every officer, but also every man in the State, to be vigilant in the exercise of all his duties as a loyal citizen of the United States, to see that all crime is instantly punished, and that all the laws, and particularly those for the protection of the freedmen, are duly executed. . .

I know that our people are loyal, and I feel under no necessity therefore, of impressing the duty of loyalty upon them, but I wish to warn them particularly against all expressions of impatience which can by any system of torturing, be construed into utterances of disloyalty. Such expressions are all reported to the North and magnified and made to play an important part in the war upon the President. Every intemperate paragraph in a newspaper is particularly adapted to this purpose — and I here beg leave to say that I think it is high time that the custom which has so long prevailed among our people and newspapers both South and North, and with such disastrous results, of speaking evil of each other, should be desisted from — it . . . is productive of nothing but evil continually. I am sorry to say that some of our Southern newspapers are copying too closely the bad example set by some in the North. The only object of certain journals would seem to be to prejudice one section of the country against the other. . . . They appear not to care what becomes of the country. The Northern papers of this class reject as odious all notice of anything good that is done in the South, and collect with care every instance of lawlessness, great or small, real or imaginary, and parade it in their columns until the minds of their readers are poisoned against us, and they mistake the act of one lawless individual for the uniform conduct of the whole community.

On the other hand, some of our Southern papers notice nothing good in the North, but cull with care every instance of elopement, murder, theft, robbery, arson, burglary, . . . until their readers are taught to believe that the North is utterly corrupt. . . . The God of battles has irrevocably decreed that we are one people. We must live together as brethren.

Popular Regard for Confederate Leaders

Publications Mississippi Historical Society, vol. viii, p. 84. Burton N. Harrison to his mother. Harrison was President Davis's private secretary. [May 18, 1867]

AT all the landings up the river there were little clusters of people to see Mr. Davis. At Brandon they . . . learned that the chief was coming up the next day. They were ready to receive us, therefore, and such a reception one can hardly expect anywhere else in the world. The ladies came on the boat, embracing and kissing him, weeping, praying, and asking God's blessing on him, until we were all overcome with the scene. Reaching Richmond we found a crowd of thousands of people on the wharves, — mainly negroes, some of whom had been instructed by the vicious Yankee emissaries who are among them, to show their insolence to us. The presence of some soldiers, however, served to keep them in order and nothing disagreeable happened. . . . All along the street men stood with uncovered heads and the women waved their handkerchiefs from the windows. . . He . . . received visits from hundreds of friends who called.

Next day, Sunday, he spent indoors, receiving visitors — particularly just after the congregations came from church. The parlor was crowded with pretty women — he kissed every one of them — and I observed that he took delight in kissing the prettiest when they went out as well as when they came in.

Monday morning the feeling thro'out the community was at fever heat. The Judge, Underwood, is the "bete noir" of Richmond, — everybody regarded him with horror and disgust because of that villainous discourse to his grand jury of negroes, which he called his "charge." . .

The women, all over town, were praying, and the men wore the most anxious faces even those streets had ever seen. The people kept their excitement under control, however, because everybody felt that an outburst would only compromise Mr. Davis. . .

Everything was according to our hopes. . . When it came to the Judge's turn to speak and he announced that the case was "bailable" and that he would admit the prisoner to bail, the effect was electrical. Everybody's face brightened, when it was all over, everybody rushed forward to congratulate Mr. Davis. The court room which had been as still almost as a death chamber resounded with shouts. . .

As long as I live I shall never forget the joyful excitement of the crowd outside, as they rushed to the carriage to shake his hand and pursued us with cheers and "God's blessings." At the hotel was a great company — assembled to congratulate him as he came up the stairs upon my arm, but everybody held back with instinctive delicacy as he entered the room where his wife was. . . The door was locked and we all knelt around the table in thankful prayer for the deliverance which God had brought us. We were all sobbing, with tears of joyful emotion . . . the door was opened and the happy multitude of friends came in with their tears and smiles of welcome.

9. INFLUENCE OF THE CONFEDERATES

General Lee's Advice to the Southern People

Extracts from General Lee's letters. Printed by permission of Capt. Robert E. Lee. See also R. E. Lee, Recollections and Letters of General Lee; J. W. Jones, Personal Reminiscences of Gen. Robt. E. Lee; and White, Robert E. Lee. [1865-1869]

[To Captain Josiah Tatnall, September 7, 1865]. Like yourself, I have, since the cessation of hostilities, advised all with whom I have conversed on the subject, who come within the terms of the President's proclamations, to take the oath of allegiance, and accept in good faith the amnesty offered. But I have gone further, and have recommended to those who were excluded from their benefits, to make application under the proviso of the proclamation of the 29th of May, to be embraced in its provisions. Both classes, in order to be restored to their former rights and privileges, were required to perform a certain act, and I do not see that an acknowledgment of fault is expressed in one more than in the other. The war being at an end, the Southern States having laid down their arms, and the questions at issue between them and the Northern States having been decided, I believe it to be the duty of every one to unite in the restoration of the country, and the reëstablishment of peace and harmony. These considerations governed me in the counsels I gave to others, and induced me on the 13th of June to make application to be included in the terms of the amnesty proclamation. I have not received an answer, and cannot inform you what has been the decision of the President. But, whatever that may be, I do not see how the course I have recommended and practiced can prove detrimental to the former President of the Confederate States. It appears to me that the allayment of passion, the dissipation of prejudice, and the restoration of reason, will alone enable the people of the country to acquire a true knowledge and form a correct judgment of the events of the past four years. It will, I think, be admitted that Mr. Davis has done nothing more than all the citizens of the Southern States, and should not be held accountable for acts performed by them in the exercise of what had been considered by them unquestionable right. I have too exalted an opinion of the American people to believe that they will consent to injustice: and it is only necessary, in my opinion, that truth should be known, for the rights of every one to be secured. I know of no surer way of eliciting the truth than by burying contention with the war.

[To Colonel R. L. Maury, 1865.] I do not know how far their emigration to another land may conduce to their prosperity. Although prospects may not now be cheering, I have entertained the opinion that, unless prevented by circumstances or necessity, it would be better for them [Confederate leaders] and the country to remain at their homes and share the fate of their respective States.

[To Gov. John Letcher.] All should unite in honest efforts to obliterate the effects of war, and to restore the blessings of peace. They should remain, if possible, in the country; promote harmony and good-feeling; qualify themselves to vote; and elect to the State and general legislatures wise and patriotic men, who will devote their abilities to the interests of the country, and the healing of all dissensions; I have invariably recommended this course since the cessation of hostilities, and have endeavored to practice it myself.

“The Backbone and Sinew of the South”

Senate Ex. Doc. no. 43, 39 Cong., 1 Sess., p. 2. From B. C. Truman's report to the President. [April 9, 1866]

IF any general assertion can be made that will apply to the masses of the people of the south, it is that they are at the present time indifferent toward the general government. For four years of eventful life as a nation, they were accustomed to speak of and regard, “our government” as the one which had its seat in Richmond; and thousands who at first looked upon that government with great suspicion and distrust, gradually, from the mere lapse of time and the force of example, came to admit it into their ideas as their government. The great body of the people in any country always move slowly; the transfer of allegiance from one de facto government to another is not effected in a day, whatever oaths of loyalty may be taken; and I have witnessed many amusing instances of mistakes on the part of those of whose attachments to the government there could be no question. Ignorance and prejudice always lag furthest behind any radical change, and no person can forget that the violent changes of the past few years have left the ideas of the populace greatly unsettled and increased their indifference. Fully one-half of the southern people never cherished an educated and active attachment to any government that was over them, and the war has left them very much as it found them.

The rank and file of the disbanded southern army — those who remained in it to the end — are the backbone and sinew of the south. Long before the surrender, corps, divisions, brigades, and regiments had been thoroughly purged of the worthless class — the skulkers — those of whom the south, as well as any other country, would be best rid; and these it is that are now prolonging past bitteresses. These are they, in great part, as I abundantly learned by personal observation, that are now editing reckless newspapers, and that put forth those pernicious utterances that so little represent the thinking, substantial people, and are so eagerly seized out and paraded by certain northern journalists, who themselves as little represent the great north. To the disbanded regiments of the rebel army, both officers and men, I look with great confidence as the best and altogether most hopeful element of the south, the real basis of reconstruction and the material of worthy citizenship. On a thousand battle-fields they have tested the invincible power of that government they vainly sought to overthrow, and along a thousand picket lines, and under the friendly flag of truce, they have learned that the soldiers of the Union bore them no hatred, and shared with them the common attributes of humanity. Around the returned soldier of the south gathers the same circle of admiring friends that we see around the millions of hearth-stones in our own section, and from him they are slowly learning the lesson of charity and of brotherhood. I know of very few more potent influences at work in promoting real and lasting reconciliation and reconstruction than the influence of the returned southern soldier.

The South "Accepts the Situation"

MS. Letter. Gen. Wade Hampton to President Johnson. [1866]

THE South unequivocally "accepts the situation" in which she is placed. Everything that she has done has been done in perfect good faith, and in the true and highest sense of the word, she is loyal. By this I mean that she intends to abide by the laws of the land honestly; to fulfill all her obligations faithfully and to keep her word sacredly, and I assert that the North has no right to demand more of her. You have no right to ask, or expect that she will at once profess unbounded love to that Union from which for four years she tried to escape at the cost of her best blood and all her treasure. Nor can you believe her to be so unutterably hypocritical, so base as to declare that the flag of the Union has already usurped in her heart the place which has so long been sacred to the "Southern Cross." The men at the South who make such professions are renegades or traitors and they will surely betray you if you trust them. But the brave men who fought to the last in a cause which they believed and still believe to have been a just one, who clung to their colors as long as they waved, and who, when their cause was lost, acknowledged their defeat and accepted the terms offered to them, as they were true to their convictions in the one case, they will prove true to their obligations in the other.

"Buttons a Sign of Disloyalty"

Report of Joint Committee on Reconstruction, part ii, p. 47. [1866]

I THINK myself the way the rebels parade their uniforms, wearing their buttons, is a sign of disloyalty. . . A great many coats are worn which were worn in the rebel army. As a general thing their buttons are cut off; but there are a good many who still wear their buttons. Some coats are evidently new, made in the old shape, but merely denuded of buttons, while a great many wear buttons. The gray predominates throughout the south. They seem to fancy it.

Confederate Uniforms Forbidden

Whitelaw Reid, After the War, p. 156.

[1865]

INDEED, nothing was more touching, in all that I saw in Savannah, than the almost painful effort of the Rebels, from Generals down to privates, to conduct themselves so as to evince respect for our soldiers, and to bring no severer punishment upon the city than it had already received. There was a brutal scene at the hotel, where a drunken sergeant, with a pair of tailors' shears, insisted on cutting the buttons from the uniform of an elegant gray-headed old Brigadier, who had just come in from Johnston's army; but he bore himself modestly and very handsomely through it. His staff was composed of fine-looking, stalwart fellows, evidently gentlemen, who appeared intensely mortified at such treatment . . . they had no clothes save their Rebel uniforms, and had, as yet, had no time to procure others — but they avoided disturbance, and submitted to what they might, with some propriety, and with the general approval of our officers, have resented. What these men may become, under a lax rein, cannot be said; but, supposing themselves under a tight rein, they are now behaving, in the main, with very marked propriety.

10. MISREPRESENTATION OF THE SOUTH

“A High Bred Lady of Mobile”

Senate Ex. Doc. no. 2, 39 Cong., 1 Sess., p. 58. Statement of Gen. T. Kilby Smith to Carl Schurz. [September 14, 1865]

ONE of the most intelligent and high-bred ladies of Mobile, having had silver plate stolen from her more than two years ago, and having, upon affidavit, secured the incarceration of two of her former slaves whom she suspected of the theft, came to me in my official capacity, and asked my order to have them whipped and tortured into a confession of the crime charged and the participants in it. This lady was surprised when I informed her that the days of the rack and the thumbscrew were passed, and though pious, well bred, and a member of the church, thought it a hardship that a negro might not be whipped or tortured till he would confess what he might know about a robbery, although not even a prima facie case existed against him, or that sort of evidence that would induce a grand jury to indict. I offer this as an instance of the feeling that exists in all classes against the negro, and their inability to realize that he is a free man and entitled to the rights of citizenship.

“Southern Atrocities”

Senate Ex. Doc. no. 2, 39 Cong., 1 Sess. Document appended to report of Carl Schurz. This report was republished by the Union League and scattered over the North. Numerous reports similar to this were circulated by agitators. [July 20, 1865]

Freedmen's Bureau [Mobile], July 20, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to report some testimony I have received of the Murders and Barbarities committed on the freedmen of Clark, Choctaw, Washington and Marengo counties, also the Alabama and Bigbee rivers.

About the last of April, two freedmen were hung in Clark county.

On the night of the eleventh of May, a freedman named Alfred was taken from his bed by his master and others and was hung, and his body still hangs to the limb.

About the middle of June, two colored soldiers (at a house in Washington county) showed their papers and were permitted to remain all night. In the morning the planter called them out and shot one dead, wounded the other, and then with the assistance of his brother (and their negro dogs) they pursued the one who had escaped. He ran about three miles and found a refuge in a white man's house, who informed the pursuers that he had passed. The soldier was finally got across the river, but has not been heard of since.

At Bladen Springs, (or rather, six miles from there) a freedman was chained to a pine tree and burned to death.

About two weeks after, and fifteen miles from Bladen, another freedman was burned to death.

In the latter part of May, fifteen miles south of Bladen, a freedman was shot outside of the planter's premises and the body dragged into the stable, to make it appear he had shot him in the act of stealing.

About the first of June, six miles west of Bladen, a freedman was hung. His body is still hanging.

About the last of May, three freedmen were coming down the Bigbee river in a skiff, when two of them were shot; the other escaped to the other shore. . .

About the first of May, near ——— landing, in Choctaw county, a freedman was hung; and about the same time, near the same neighborhood, a planter shot a freedman, (who was talking to one of his servants,) and dragged his body into his garden to conceal it.

A preacher (near Bladen Springs) states in the pulpit that the roads in Choctaw county stunk with the dead bodies of servants that had fled from their masters.

The people about Bladen declare that no negro shall live in the country unless he remains with his master and is as obedient as heretofore.

In Clark county, about the first of June, a freedman was shot through the heart; his body lies unburied.

About the last of May, a planter hung his servant (a woman) in presence of all the neighborhood. Said planter had killed this woman's husband three weeks before. This occurred at Suggsville, Clark county.

About the last of April, two women were caught near a certain plantation in Clark county and hung; their bodies are still suspended.

On the 19th of July, two freedmen were taken off the steamer Commodore Farrand, tied, and hung; then taken down, their heads cut off and their bodies thrown in the river.

July 11, two men took a woman off the same boat and threw her in the river. This woman had a coop, with some chickens. They threw all in together, and told her to go to the damned Yankees. The woman was drowned.

There are regular patrols posted on the rivers, who board some of the boats, after the boats leave they hang, shoot, or drown the victims they may find on them, and all those found on the roads or coming down the river are most invariably murdered.

This is only a few of the murders that are committed on the helpless and unprotected freedmen of the above named counties. . .

I have been careful of authenticity, and very much has been related to me that I have declined accepting as testimony, although I believe its truth.

The history of all these cases, besides others, I have in full, with all their horrible particulars.

Captain and Ass't. Sup't. Freedmen.

House Journal (Alabama), January 16, 1867.

[1867]

WHEREAS, Correspondents of public journals North and West, and speakers clerical and secular, are daily asserting that it is unsafe for persons recently in hostility to us to come among us, or to reside in our midst on account of threatened personal violence, greatly to the prejudice of our interests, and the speedy restoration of those friendly relations essential to the prosperity of the people, and to the quiet of the nation : Therefore,

Be it resolved, etc., That we hereby publish and declare all such assertions to be calumnies working great injustice and wrong to the people of Alabama, who are peaceable and law-abiding citizens actively engaged in the pursuit of peace, trying to restore their shattered fortunes by honest industry, and willing to receive, and earnestly invite all who are honest, industrious, and peaceable, and are desirous of establishing themselves as farmers, mechanics, or artisans amongst us, and to become citizens of our State, to assist in tilling our fertile lands.

II. FROM SLAVERY TO FREEDOM

The News of Freedom

Smedes, A Southern Planter. p. 228. Copyright 1887. Used by permission of James Pott and Co. [1865]

ON the day that the news reached him, he [Col. Dabney] called his son Thomas to him, and they rode together to the field where the negroes were at work. He informed them of the news that had reached him, and that they were now free. His advice was that they should continue to work the crop as they had been doing. At the end of the year they should receive such compensation for their labor as he thought just.

From this time till January 1, 1866, no apparent change took place among the Burleigh negroes. Those who worked in the field went out as usual, and cultivated and gathered in the crops. In the house, they went about their customary duties. We expected them to go away or to demand wages, or at least to give some sign that they knew they were free, except that they were very quiet and serious, and more obedient and kind than they had ever been known to be . . . we saw no change in them.

At Christmas such compensation was made them for their services as seemed just. Afterwards fixed wages were offered and accepted. Thomas called them up now and told them that as they no longer belonged to him they must discontinue calling him "master." "Yes, marster," "yes, marster," was the answer to this.

"Free as Birds"

Mrs. V. V. Clayton, White and Black under the Old Regime, p. 152. Copyright 1899. Used by permission of Mrs. Clayton. [1865]

MY husband said . . . "I think it best for me to inform our negroes of their freedom." So he ordered all the grown slaves to come to him, and told them they no longer belonged to him as property, but were all free. He said to them, "You are not bound to remain with me any longer, and I have a proposition to make to you. If any of you desire to leave, . . . I propose to furnish you with a conveyance to move you, and with provisions for the balance of the year." The universal answer was, "Master, we want to stay right here with you."

The pleasure of knowing they were free seemed to be mingled with sadness. That very night, long after the usual hour for bedtime, the hum of the busy spinning wheel was heard. On inquiry in the morning I found that Nancy was the one spinning long into the night. Asking why she had been up so late at night at work, she replied: "I have no master to feed and clothe Nancy now. She will have to look out for something for herself and look out for the rainy day." In many instances the slaves were so infatuated with the idea of being as they said "free as birds," that they left their homes and consequently suffered; but our slaves were not so foolish. We had the cotton crop on hand which was made the first year of the war. . . . This old cotton crop was sold, and the proceeds divided out among all; each family receiving according to its size. . . . Our negroes soon parted with their money. Some bought judiciously, some gay finery. All were pleased. My brother had a man named John, a brick mason by trade, to whom he was very much attached. He said to him, "John, you are free." He replied: "Massa, I'd like to see them Yankees make me eny freer den I is." . . .

Gen. Clayton devoted himself to his farm, the only difference in the order of things being that the former slaves were paid monthly wages, and provided their own clothes. I often said to my husband that the freedom to the negroes was a freedom to me, a freedom from responsibility and care.

A Plan for a Negro Town

Whitelaw Reid, After the War, p. 89. Extracts from the military order organizing Mitchellville in South Carolina. There were hundreds of similar organizations. This was the army plan for solving the negro problem. [1865]

1. All lands now set apart for the colored population, near Hilton Head, are declared to constitute a village, to be known as the village of Mitchelville. Only freedmen and colored persons residing or sojourning within the territorial of said village, shall be deemed and considered inhabitants thereof.

2. The village of Mitchelville shall be organized and governed as follows: Said village shall be divided into districts, as nearly equal in population as practicable, for the election of councilmen, sanitary and police regulations, and the general government of the people residing therein.

3. The government shall consist of a supervisor and Treasurer, to be appointed by, and hold office during the pleasure of the Military Commander of the district assisted by a councilman from each council district, to be elected by the people, who shall also, at the same time, choose a Recorder and Marshal. The duties of the Recorder and Marshal shall be defined by the Council of Administration.

4. The Supervisor and Councilmen shall constitute the Council of Administration, with the Recorder as secretary.

5. The Council of Administration shall have power:

To pass such ordinances as it shall deem best, in relation to the following subjects: To establish schools for the education of children and other persons. To prevent and punish vagrancy, idleness and crime. To punish licentiousness, drunkenness, offences against public decency and good order, and petty violation of the rights of property and person. To require due observance of the Lord's Day. To collect fines and penalties. To punish offences against village ordinances. To settle and determine disputes concerning claims for wages, personal property, and controversies between debtor and creditor. To levy and collect taxes to defray the expenses of the village government, and for the support of schools. To lay out, regulate, and clean the streets. To establish wholesale sanitary regulations for the prevention of disease. To appoint officers, places and times for the holding of elections. To compensate municipal officers, and to regulate all other matters affecting the well-being of the citizens, and good order of society. . . .

8. Hilton Head Island will be divided into school districts, to conform, as nearly as practicable, to the schools as established by the Freedmen's Association. In each district there shall be elected one School Commissioner, who will be charged with supplying the wants of the schools, under the direction of the teacher thereof. Every child, between the ages of six and fifteen years, residing within the limits of such school Districts, shall attend school daily, while they are in session, excepting only in case of sickness. Where children are of a suitable age to earn a livelihood, and their services are required by their parents or guardians, and on the written order of the teacher of such school District, may be exempt from attendance, for such time as said order shall specify. And the parents and guardians will be held responsible that said children so attend school, under the penalty of being punished, at the discretion of the Council of Administration.

Free Negro Labor

Senate Ex. Doc. no. 2, 39 Cong., 1 Sess., p. 21. From Carl Schurz's report to President Johnson. [1865]

IMMEDIATELY after the emancipation of the slaves, when the general confusion was most perplexing, the prevalent desire among the whites seemed to be, if they could not retain their negroes as slaves, to get rid of them entirely. Wild speculations were indulged in, how to remove the colored population at once and to import white laborers to fill its place; how to obtain a sufficient supply of coolies, etc. Even at the present moment the removal of the freedmen is strongly advocated by those who have the traditional horror of a free negro, and in some sections, especially where the soil is more adapted to the cultivation of cereals than the raising of the staples, planters appear to be inclined to drive the negroes away, at least from their plantations. . . .

I found a very few instances of original secessionists also manifesting a willingness to give the free-labor experiment a fair trial. I can represent the sentiment of this small class in no better way than by quoting the language used by an Alabama judge. . . "As to this thing of free negro labor, I do not believe in it, but I will give it a fair trial. I have a plantation and am going to make contracts with my hands, and then I want a real Yankee to run the machine for me; not one of our New Yorkers or Pennsylvanians, but the genuine article from Massachusetts or Vermont — one who can not only farm, but sing psalms and pray, and teach school — a real abolitionist, who believes in the thing just as I don't believe in it. If he does not succeed, I shall consider it proof conclusive that you are wrong and I am right."

12. TREATMENT OF NEGROES

Conditions of the Negroes after the Surrender

Senate Ex. Doc. no. 2. 39 Cong., 1 Sess., pp. 15, 31. Report of Carl Schurz to the President. [1865]

WHEN the war came to a close, the labor system of the south was already much disturbed. During the progress of military operations large numbers of slaves had left their masters and followed the columns of our armies; others had taken refuge in our camps; many thousands had enlisted in the service of the national government. Extensive settlements of negroes had been formed along the seaboard and the banks of the Mississippi, under the supervision of army officers and treasury agents, and the government was feeding the colored refugees, who could not be advantageously employed, in the so-called contraband camps. Many slaves had also been removed by their masters, as our armies penetrated the country, either to Texas or to the interior of Georgia and Alabama. Thus a considerable portion of the laboring force had been withdrawn from its former employments. But a majority of the slaves remained on the plantations to which they belonged, especially in those parts of the country which were not touched by the war, and where, consequently, the emancipation proclamation was not enforced by the military power. Although not ignorant of the stake they had in the result of the contest, the patient bondmen waited quietly for the development of things. But as soon as the struggle was finally decided, and our forces were scattered about in detachments to occupy the country, the so far unmoved masses began to stir. The report went among them that their liberation was no longer a mere contingency, but a fixed fact. Large numbers of colored people left the plantations; many flocked to our military posts and camps to obtain the certainty of their freedom, and others walked away merely for the purpose of leaving the place on which they had been held in slavery, and because they could now go with impunity. Still others, and their number was by no means inconsiderable, remained with their former masters and continued their work on the field, but under new and as yet unsettled conditions, and under the agitating influence of a feeling of restlessness. In some localities, however, where our troops had not yet penetrated and where no military post was within reach, planters endeavored and partially succeeded in maintaining between themselves and the negroes the relation of master and slave partly by concealing from them the great changes that had taken place, and partly by terrorizing them into submission to their behests. But aside from these exceptions, the country found itself thrown into that confusion which is naturally inseparable from a change so great and so sudden. . .

The negro is constitutionally docile and eminently good-natured. Instances of the most touching attachment of freedmen to their old masters and mistresses have come to my notice. To a white man whom they believe to be sincerely their friend they cling with greater affection even than to one of their own race. By some northern speculators their confidence has been sadly abused. Nevertheless, the trust they place in persons coming from the north, or in any way connected with the government, is most childlike and unbounded. . . Those who enjoy their confidence enjoy also their affection. Centuries of slavery have not been sufficient to make them the enemies of the white race. If in the future a feeling of mutual hostility should develop itself between the races, it will probably not be the fault of those who have shown such an inexhaustible patience under the most adverse and trying circumstances. . .

A belief, conviction, or prejudice, or whatever you may call it, so widely spread and apparently so deeply rooted as this, that the negro will not work without physical compulsion, is certainly calculated to have a very serious influence upon the conduct of the people entertaining it. It naturally produced a desire to preserve slavery in its original form as much and as long as possible . . . or to introduce into the new system that element of physical compulsion which would make the negro work. Efforts were, indeed, made to hold the negro in his old state of subjection, especially in such localities where our military forces had not yet penetrated, or where the country was not garrisoned in detail. Here and there planters succeeded for a limited period to keep their former slaves in ignorance or at least doubt, about their new rights.

Treatment of Negroes in Texas

Senate Ex. Doc. no. 6, 39 Cong., 2 Sess., pp. 144, 156. Report of General J. B. Kiddoo, U. S. Army. [1865]

THE better class of planters, who were former slaveholders, are, as a general thing, disposed to deal fairly with them in the division of the crop, but there is a class of men, commonly known in the State as "adventurers," small planters, travelling speculators, country store-keepers . . . swarming the planting regions like as many buzzards, seeking for prey. They endeavor to sell to the freedmen worthless jewelry, cheap clothing, and unsound horses. The country store-keepers sell them rope and bagging, often at enormous prices, and, in collusion with the small planters, take a lien on their portion of the crop, the freedmen having no money; this being their first year's labor for wages. Money is in some instances advanced for them to pay the tax on their cotton, which is required before it can go into market, and before it gets out of the hands of these men it is far spent. In many instances bills are presented against their portion of the crop for trifles, of such size as to almost absorb it; this, also, by collusion between the planters and small stores, and the natural presumption is that they divide the profits. . . .

I consider it just to the better people of Texas to state that the outrages spoken of therein are usually committed by a class of individuals who never were slave owners, but were the negro's competitor in labor, and hence his enemy, and now particularly so, since the negro is free and approximates towards equality with them. It is the lower class of people that have most bitter and vulgar hatred of the negro. The more intelligent and liberal people consider the negro set free by the arbitrament of arms, and hence have no animosity towards him; while the other class hold him personally responsible, and treat him accordingly. . . .

Those planters who feel kindly towards the negro, and accept his freedom as one of the results of the war, over which he had no immediate control, report to me that they work . . . and better than could have been expected; that they work cheerfully; that they observe the new and anomalous relation under which they have been placed towards their former masters with a commendable propriety; that their good behavior is beyond all expectations; that they have not been carried away by exaggerated and impracticable ideas of their freedom, and that they would not re-enslave them if it were in their power. This latter I believe to be the unanimous sentiment of the State. No one wishes the negro re-enslaved and all rejoice at his freedom, but take some exceptions at the manner in which it was brought about. . . . Although much has been accomplished this year in this State, yet it has taken much extra exertion. . . . They are, as a class, perfect children, intellectually. They have hitherto had an owner and overseer to do their thinking for them, and now, when allowed to think, and act for themselves, are ill fit to exercise the distinguished prerogative. In their abject ignorance, they have been led to believe that their freedom means unrestraint — license to work as they please and do as they please, regardless of contracts or other legal obligations. In order that free labor may prove a success, the freedmen need to be taught the simplest lessons of practical life. They should be taught to depend upon their own personal exertions, and that the highest enjoyment of their freedom is through the means of labor, industry, diligence, frugality, and virtue. One of the greatest difficulties I have to contend with in the experiment of free labor is the want of patience on the part of the southern people. They are too ready, and almost eager, to pronounce it a failure. In their sudden liberation from slavery, the freed people are, I will admit, too often restless, shiftless, and suspicious of all restraint, but these characteristics . . . are the result of their former, rather than their present, relations, and only need kindness, patience, education, and good faith to overcome.

J. T. Trowbridge, The South, p. 239.

[1865]

EAST Tennesseans, though opposed to slavery and secession, do not like niggers. There is at this day more prejudice against color among the middle and poorer classes — the “Union” men, of the South, who owned few or no slaves — than among the planters who owned them by scores and hundreds. . . . On reaching Nashville, I learned that the negro testimony bill had been defeated in the legislature by the members from East Tennessee.

Loyalists Oppose Negroes

Report of Joint Committee on Reconstruction, part i, pp. 112, 117, 121. Statements of Freedmen’s Bureau officials.

THE eastern portion of the State [Tennessee], where about three-fourths of all the loyal people of the State live, is in a peculiar condition in regard to politics. The Union people in my section, Middle Tennessee, consider it absolutely necessary for the good of the country that the negro should have his rights in court; and not only that, but that we should at least inaugurate the principle that those who have fought in the army should have the right to vote as well as those who pay taxes and those who can read and write. But our Union friends in the eastern portion of the State, as we understand it, almost to a man, although the best Union men in the land, are opposed to any such thing. . . .

I have not been in favor of moving the military. I can tell you what an old citizen, a Union man, said to me. Said he, “I tell you what, if you take away the military from Tennessee, the buzzards can’t eat up the niggers as fast as we’ll kill ’em.” I do not think it would be as bad as that; but I know there are plenty of bad men there who would maltreat the negro. . . .

Tennessee is peculiar. In no other State do you find the same sort of opposition as in Tennessee. My duties within the last eight months, have called me through the five States of Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, and Mississippi. I made an inspection tour through the three States below Tennessee, in addition to my own regular duties. It is a melancholy fact that among the bitterest opponents of the negro in Tennessee are the intensely radical loyalists of the mountain district — the men who have been in our armies. Take East Tennessee, for instance. The great opposition to the measure in the Tennessee legislature, giving the negro the right to testify and an equality before the law, has come from that section, chiefly. . . . In Middle Tennessee and in West Tennessee the largest and the wealthiest planters of the old slaveholding population have more cordially co-operated with me in my duties than the people of East Tennessee.

Friends and Enemies of the Negroes

Senate Ex. Doc. no. 41. 39 Cong., 1 Sess., p. 15. Report of B. C. Truman to the President. [April 9, 1866]

ALMOST the only key that furnishes a satisfactory solution to the southern question in its relations to the negro, that gives a reasonable explanation to the treatment which he receives and the estimation in which he is held, is found in the fact — too often forgotten in considering this matter — that the people from their earliest days have regarded slavery as his proper estate. . . . That a vast majority of the southern people honestly entertain this opinion no one who travels among them for eight months can doubt. . . .

Holding that the negro occupies a middle ground between the human race and the animal, they regard it as a real misfortune to him that he should be stripped of a protector, and that the immortal proclamation of President Lincoln was wicked, or at least mistaken, and a scourge to society. The persistency and honesty with which many, even of the greatest men of the south, hold to this opinion, is almost unaccountable to a northern man, and is an element of such magnitude that it cannot well be omitted from the consideration.

From the surrender of the rebel armies up to the Christmas holidays, and more especially for a few weeks preceding the latter, there was a nervousness exhibited throughout the south, in relation to their late slaves. . . . There were vague and terrible fears of a servile insurrection. . . . In consequence of this there were extensive seizures of arms and ammunition, which the negroes had foolishly collected, and strict precautions were taken to avoid any outbreak. Pistols, old muskets, and shot-guns were taken away from them as such weapons would be wrested from the hands of lunatics. Since the holidays, however, there has been a great improvement in this matter; many of the whites appear to be ashamed of their former distrust, and the negroes are seldom molested now in carrying the fire-arms of which they make such a vain display. In one way or another they have procured great numbers of old army muskets and revolvers, particularly in Texas, and I have in a few instances, been amused at the vigor and audacity with which they have employed them to protect themselves against the robbers and murderers that infest that State.

Another result of the above-mentioned settled belief in the negro's inferiority, and in the necessity that he should not be left to himself without a guardian, is that in some sections he is discouraged from leaving his old master. I have known of planters who considered it an offence against neighborhood courtesy for another to hire their old hands, and in two instances that were reported the disputants came to blows over the breach of etiquette. It is only, however, in the most remote regions, where our troops have seldom or never penetrated, that the negroes have not perfect liberty to rove where they choose. Even when the attempt is made to restrain them by a system of passes from their employers, or from police patrols, it is of little avail; for the negroes in their ignorance and darkness of understanding, are penetrated with a singularly strong conviction that they "are not free so long as they stay at the old place," and all last summer and fall they pretty thoroughly demonstrated their freedom by changing their places of residence. . . In this general upheaval thousands of long-scattered families were joyously reunited. It is a strange fact, however, and one which I have abundantly established by the testimony of hundreds of the negroes themselves, that a large majority of them have finally returned voluntarily and settled down in the old cabins of their former quarters. The negro clings to old associations — it was only a temporary impulse of their new-found freedom to wander away from them; and at last they returned, generally wearied, hungry, and forlorn. . . When I was in Selma, Alabama, last fall, a constant stream of them, of all ages, and conditions, was pouring through that city on their way, as they always told me, to Mississippi or Tennessee. Many were transported free by our government, while many were on foot, trudging hopefully and painfully forward toward their old homes, from which they had been taken to escape our armies. . .

As to the personal treatment received by the negro at the hands of the southern people there is wide-spread misapprehension. It is not his former master, as a general thing, that is his worst enemy, but quite the contrary. I have talked earnestly with hundreds of the old slave-owners, and seen them move among their former "chattels," and I am not mistaken. The feeling with which a very large majority of them regard the negro is one of genuine commiseration, although it is not a sentiment much elevated above that with which they would look upon a suffering animal for which they have formed an attachment. Last summer the negroes, exulting in their new-found freedom, . . were gay, thoughtless, and improvident; and, as a consequence, when the winter came hundreds of them felt the pinchings of want, and many perished. . .

It is the former slave-owners who are the best friends the negro has in the south — those who, heretofore, have provided for his mere physical comfort, generally with sufficient means, though entirely neglecting his better nature, while it is the "poor whites" that are his enemies. It is from these he suffers most. In a state of slavery they hated him; and now that he is free, there is no striking abatement of this sentiment, and the former master no longer feels called by the instinct of interest to extend that protection that he once did. On the streets, by the roadside, in his wretched hut, in the field of labor — everywhere, the inoffensive negro is exposed to their petty and contemptible persecutions; while, on the other hand, I have known instances where the respectable, substantial people of a community have united together to keep guard over a house in which the negroes were taking their amusements, and from which, a few nights before, they had been rudely driven by vagabonds, who found pleasure in their fright and suffering. I reiterate, that the former owners, as a class, are the negroes' best friends in the south, although many of this class will diligently strive to discourage the freedmen from any earnest efforts to promote their higher welfare. When one believes that a certain race of beings are incapable of advancement, he is very prone to withhold the means of that advancement. And it is in this form that a species of slavery will longest be perpetuated — it is in these strongholds that it will last die out. I am pretty sure that there is not a single negro in the whole south who is not receiving pay for his labor according to his own contract; but, as a general thing, the freedmen are encouraged to collect about the old mansion in their little quarters, labor for their former masters for set terms, receiving, besides their pay, food, quarters, and medical attendance, and thus continuing on in their former state of dependence. The cruelties of slavery, and all its outward forms, have entirely passed away; but, as might have been expected, glimmerings of its vassalage, its subserviency, and its helplessness, linger.

It is the result of my observation, also, not only that the planters, generally, are far better friends to the negro than the poor whites, but also better than a majority of northern men who go south to rent plantations. . . . The northerner is practical, energetic, economical, and thrifty — the negro is slow, awkward, wasteful, and slovenly; he causes his new employer to lose his patience, and to seize hold and attempt to perform, himself, what he sees so badly executed. The southerner is accustomed to the ways of slaves from his youth up; hence he is languidly and goodnatureedly indifferent; . . . the northern employer is accustomed to see laborers who are vigorous and industrious; he knows the extent of a full day's labor, and he expects all to perform the amount; the southern man has always been compelled to employ two or three to do the work of one, and is more indulgent. It is the almost universal testimony of the negroes themselves, who have been under the supervision of both classes — and I have talked with many with a view to this point — that they prefer to labor for a southern employer. This is not by any means to be construed to mean that they desire to return to slavery . . . but that, being once assured of their liberty to go and come at will, they generally return to the service of the southerner.

A Northern View of the Negro

Report of Joint Committee on Reconstruction, part iii, p. 157.
Statement of Gen. John Tarbell, U. S. Army. [1866]

It is also my impression that many people in the north very greatly overrate the present character and capacity of the plantation negro, as well as his capacity for future improvement. I think time will show that the most ardent in the north will be greatly disappointed in the improvement of these negroes, even under the most favorable circumstances. I wish also to add, judging from my travels in these three States, that these reports of outrages upon the colored people, of ill treatment of the northern settlers, are quite exceptional cases, and exaggerated, if not altogether false, and that all these statements in the newspapers of outrages upon the blacks and upon settlers from the north, I think, do the educated people of the south very great injustice. There are, no doubt, disloyal and disorderly persons in the south, but it is an entire mistake to apply these terms to a whole people. I would as soon travel alone, unarmed, through the south as through the north. The south I left is not at all the south I hear and read about in the north. From the sentiment I hear in the north, I would scarcely recognize the people I saw, and, except their politics, liked so well. I have entire faith that the better classes are friendly to the negroes, and that through this feeling, and the laws of capital and labor, the relations of these classes will settle down together on terms equitable and just to both. I have also faith that when the north and south come to know each other better their relations will be all that could be desired.

After a Year of Freedom

Senate Ex. Doc. no. 6, 39 Cong., 2 Sess., p. 20. Report of Gen. Wager Swayne, Assistant Commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau in Alabama. [1866]

THE Rev. Dr. H. N. McTyeire who, with distinguished manliness, was always openly in favor of all schools for colored people, has helped us largely through the church of which he is now bishop. The employment of the bureau in this district [Alabama] to mould existing institutions which are permanent, rather than to displace such by a temporary antagonism of military power, is due to its original reception in a spirit of good will. Hon. Lewis E. Parsons, the provisional governor, was from first to last sincerely desirous for its usefulness, and its warm supporter in all measures of humanity. The present governor, Hon. R. M. Patton, his successor, has not varied from this course. No difficulty has occurred with either too decided for solution by strong friendship, and the records of the legislature and convention show that good results of this relation are not wanting. A growing kindness between the races, an increasing fairness in the application of the laws, prospective changes of most useful tendency, and other indications of a hopeful future, may be attributed in part to the same cause.

So much for what is past and present. Of the future is required, for both refugees and freedmen, the utmost opportunity attainable for labor, and that legislation be no longer adverse to the poor. A system of State care for paupers, not confined to simple distribution of coarse food, and which can rigidly exclude whoever is not actually helpless; schools for both white and black in regular abundance; and secure and quick repayment for their service rendered; these are the needs they have in common.

Their other needs are different. For freedmen work is plenty, and of such as they are used to, with ample compensation. With refugees, as the whites are called whom war has left in destitution, the case is sadly otherwise. "Remote, unfriended, melancholy, slow," the widow and the fatherless, the aged and infirm, are scattered through the "piney woods," almost beyond the reach of work, or schools, or help. They cling to their old homes, alike unwilling and unfit for the climate and the toil of the great planting districts; and are in utter, hopeless desolation. The problem of their wants so far has met with no solution save the possible development of manufactures. To bring them into small communities, subject them to the influence of emulation and of schools, and to afford light labor fitted for their strength, these are the wants to be supplied. Minerals of every kind and wood and water-power are abundant where they live, and to my mind no charity has half so rich a promise.

The freedman's wants have a more public nature; a lien upon the product of his labor for its dues, a fair apportionment of schools and other opportunities, and, above all, a stern accountability which he can soon enforce on those who shall abuse their office in the law, or shall ignore it; and for further benefit he may be left to cultivate the influence which comes from private life efficiently conducted. But these are part and parcel of that hold upon the laws which they have who help to make them. To give them this, as amply fit as many of them are, and many more becoming so, is duty, and humanity, and interest.

AND yet the government had left the freedmen in a [bad] condition. . . It felt that it had done enough for him. It had made him free, and henceforth he must make his own way in the world. Yet he had none of the conditions of self-preservation or self-protection. He was free from the individual master, but the slave of society. He had neither money, property, nor friends. He was free from the old plantation, but he had nothing but the dusty road under his feet. He was free from the old quarter that once gave him shelter, but a slave to the rains of summer and to the frosts of winter. He was . . . turned loose, naked, hungry, and destitute to the open sky.

Freedom a Disappointment

Montgomery Advertiser.

[August 13, 1865]

NINE hundred of [the negroes] assembled [near Mobile] to consider their condition, their rights and duties under the new state of existence upon which they have been so suddenly launched. Our informant was surprised at the hard, practical sense and moderation of tone with which the spokesmen of the meeting urged their views. After long talk and careful deliberation, this meeting resolved, by a vote of seven hundred voices to two hundred, that they had made a practical trial for three months of the freedom which the war had bequeathed to them; that its realities were far from being so flattering as their imagination had painted it. That they had discovered that the prejudices of color were by no means confined to the people of the South, but, on the contrary, that it was stronger and more marked against them in the strangers from the North, than in the home people of the South, . . . that negroes no more than white men, can live without work, or be comfortable without homes; that their northern deliverers from bondage had not, as they had expected and been taught to expect, undertaken to provide for their happy existence in their new state of freedom, and that their old masters had ceased to take any interest in them or have a care for them; and finally, that their "last state was worse than the first," and it was their deliberate conclusion that their true happiness and well-being required them to return to the homes which they had abandoned in a moment of excitement, and go to work again under their old masters. And so the resolutions were passed, and at last accounts the wanderers were picking up their little stock of movable goods, preparatory to the execution of their sensible purposes.

Fear of Negro Insurrection

Annual Cyclopedia, 1865, p. 627.

[1865]

MR. FEREBEE [of North Carolina] . . said that in his county the white citizens had all been deprived of arms, while the negroes were almost all of them armed by some means or other. It was a fact that nearly every negro was supplied with arms, and there was a general feeling of insecurity on the part of the whites. There had been rumors of anticipated trouble in some of the counties at the commencement of next year. He did not know how well grounded the fears might be, but there certainly was much apprehension among the white citizens, especially among the female portion, of coming danger.

Gen. Dockery . . stated that in his county the white residents had been disarmed, and were at present almost destitute of means to protect themselves against robbery and outrage.

Disorderly Blacks

National Intelligencer, January 6, 1866. Georgia correspondence.

[1866]

THE Christmas holidays have happily passed over without any such organized outbreak on the part of the black population as was at one time very seriously feared, though there have been no few individual cases of crime; some of very peculiar atrocity. . . About the same time, in this city, a gang of negro troops assaulted a house occupied by some Irishmen, who stood stoutly on the defense, and nothing but the interposition of a strong guard prevented the quarrel being [brought] to a bloody conclusion. . . Some weeks after these occurrences a very aggravated outrage . . . was attempted by another crew of negro soldiers, aided by some debauched country blacks. . . An attack [was made] upon the house of a widow lady, near the city, who at the time had several young ladies staying with her. . . Two young gentlemen . . . kept the mob some time at bay, killing four and mortally wounding two, though, in the end, they were reduced to the greatest extremities, and would beyond doubt have been murdered, and their helpless female charges delivered over to brutality, had it not been for the timely arrival of an officer with troops. From twenty-five to thirty negroes, the soldiers who instigated and led on the assault being about half that number, were engaged in this affair, and all surviving were arrested, though, to speak plainly, it is not believed they will be at all adequately punished. Some month or so since, it will be remembered, a very worthy physician in a neighboring county was murdered, and his assassin, who avowed openly the crime, arrested and consigned to the jail in this city. It is now charged by a paper here, and no denial has been made apparent, that this negro was lately released from confinement, and seen upon the streets at liberty. Per contra, there are now in the same jail two young white men charged before and convicted by a court-martial of having killed a negro woman in the interior part of the State. Lying under sentence of death, these men were yesterday to have been hanged but a reprieve has been obtained to lay a new testimony before the President. . . It is undeniable that the severity, and perhaps a just severity, in the case of white men is thought to very illy contrast with the lenity shown to blacks. This impression of a very gross injustice is deeply rooted here, and as, in various ways, Augusta largely gives the tone to the State, it may safely be said that

Transactions of Alabama Historical Society, vol. iv. Letters of William F. Samford. [1866]

HERE, in a mile of me, is a negro woman dying, who says an old African hag put a snake in her four years ago, and the Obi doctor has gone to deliver her. "Civilization" is "marching two steps backwards" like the truant boy went to school, "to one forward" in our "Africa" down here. The negroes here spend their time going to "funerals," religious howlings, promiscuous sexual intercourse, thieving and "conjuring." At their "funerals" they bellow like cattle when one of their number is slaughtered. . . .

Emancipation is a fact. I have sworn to support it, and I shall keep my oath. Sambo is a freeman by force of presidential proclamation. But it is not unlawful to see certain evils of emancipation which call for the active interposition of the philanthropists. Sambo will flog his child unmercifully, and Sally will neglect it in sickness, and so between paternal action and maternal non-action little Cuffy has a "hard road to travel" for twenty-one years of his infancy — a terrible preparatory training for the bliss of being "free to starve."

The stupendous wrong and folly consists in taking a poor, ignorant, childlike race from under the fostering care of a patriarchal government and withdrawing from it the protection of interest. . . .

The Christmas holidays here are cold, rainy, cheerless. The heart of the South is beginning to sink in despair. The streets are full of negroes, who refuse to make contracts to labor the next year. The short crop of 1866 causes much dissatisfaction. They will not engage to work for anything but wages, and few are able to pay wages. They are penniless but resolute in their demands. They expect to see all the land divided out equally between them and their old masters, in time to make the next crop. One of the most intelligent black men I know told me this day that in a neighboring village where several hundred negroes were congregated, he does not think that as many as three made contracts, although the planters are urgent in their solicitations, and offering the highest prices for labor they can possibly afford to pay. The same man informed me that the impression widely prevails that Congress is about to divide out the lands, and that this impression is given out by Federal soldiers at the nearest military station. It cannot be disguised that in spite of the most earnest efforts of their old master to conciliate and satisfy them, the estrangement between the races increases in its extent and bitterness. Nearly all the negro men are armed with repeaters and many of them carry them openly, day and night. The status is most unsatisfactory, and really full of just apprehensions of the direst results. The negro children are growing up in ignorance and vice. The older ones, men and women, abandon themselves to dissipation of the lowest sort. Their schools, "so-called," are simply a farce.

Increased Mortality among the Negroes

OF the 453 whites who died, [Charleston, South Carolina, 1870], 181 were children of 5 years and under; and of the 918 blacks who died, 461 were children of 5 years and under — the mortality of infants among the colored people being proportionately much greater than among the whites. . . . But the remarkable fact is the greatly larger mortality of the negroes, in proportion to their total number, as compared with the white people. . . . The mortality of 1869 shows one death in 44.93 whites, and one death in 26.77 coloured people. In other words, nearly twice as many coloured people died as white people in proportion to their respective numbers. . . . The mortality of whites in the year 1860 was 719, or one in 37.5, and the mortality of the coloured people 753 or one in 28.47. The health of the whites has greatly improved since the war, while the health of the negroes has declined, till the mortality of the coloured population, greater than the mortality of the whites before the war, has now become so markedly greater, that nearly two coloured die for every one white person out of equal numbers of each. To those accustomed to think of slavery only as prolific of every form of evil, this increased mortality of the negroes under emancipation may appear surprising.

14. CONSIDERATION OF NEGRO SUFFRAGE

A Former Slaveholder's View of Negro Suffrage

Whitelaw Reid, After the War, p. 288.

A BROTHER of General Wade Hampton, the South Carolina Hotspur, was on board. He saw no great objection to negro suffrage, so far as the whites were concerned; and for himself, South Carolinian and Secessionist though he was, he was quite willing to accept it. He only dreaded its effect on the blacks themselves. Hitherto they had, in the main, been modest and respectful, and mere freedom was not likely to spoil them. But the deference to them likely to be shown by partisans eager for their votes would have a tendency to uplift and unbalance them. Beyond this, no harm would be done the South by negro suffrage. The old owners would cast the votes of their people almost as absolutely and securely as they cast their own. If Northern men expected in this way to build up a Northern party in the South, they were gravely mistaken. They would only be multiplying the power of the old and natural leaders of Southern politics by giving every vote to a former slave. Heretofore such men had served their masters only in the fields; now they would do no less faithful service at the polls. If the North could stand it, the South could. For himself, he should make no special objection to negro suffrage as one of the terms of reorganization, and if it came, he did not think the South would have much cause to regret it.

The Ballot Necessary for the Negro

THE interference of the national authority in the home concerns of the southern States would be rendered less necessary, and the whole problem of political and social reconstruction be much simplified, if, while the masses lately arrayed against the government are permitted to vote, the large majority of those who were always loyal . . . were not excluded from all influence upon legislation. In all questions concerning the Union, the national debt, and the future social organization of the south, the feelings of the colored man are naturally in sympathy with the views and aims of the national government. While the southern whites fought against the Union, the negro did all he could to aid it; while the southern white sees in the national government his conqueror, the negro sees in it his protector; while the white owes to the national debt his defeat, the negro owes to it his deliverance; while the white considers himself robbed and ruined by the emancipation of the slaves, the negro finds in it the assurance of future prosperity and happiness. In all the important issues the negro would be led by natural impulse to forward the ends of the government, and by making his influence, as part of the voting body, tell upon the legislation of the States, render the interference of the national authority unnecessary.

As the most difficult of the pending questions are intimately connected with the status of the negro in southern society, it is obvious that a correct solution can be more easily obtained if he has a voice in the matter. In the right to vote we would find the best permanent protection against oppressive class-legislation, as well as against individual persecution. . . . It is a notorious fact that the rights of a man of some political power are far less exposed to violation than those of one who is, in matter of public interest, completely subject to the will of others. A voter is a man of influence; small as that influence may be in the single individual, it becomes larger when the individual belongs to a numerous class of voters. . . . Such an individual is an object of interest to the political parties that desire to have the benefit of his ballot. . . . The first trials ought certainly to be made while the national power is still there to prevent or repress disturbances; but the practice once successfully inaugurated under the protection of that power, it would probably be more apt than anything else to obliterate old antagonisms. . . .

The effect of the extension of the franchise to the colored people upon the development of free labor and upon the security of human rights in the south being the principal object in view, the objections raised on the ground of the ignorance of the freedmen become unimportant. Practical liberty is a good school. . . It is idle to say that it will be time to speak of negro suffrage when the whole colored race will be educated, for the ballot may be necessary to him to secure his education.

It has been asserted that the negro would be a voting machine in the hand of his employer. . . I have heard it said in the south that the freedmen are more likely to be influenced by their schoolmasters and preachers. But even if we suppose the employer to control to a certain extent the negro laborer's vote, two things are to be taken into consideration: 1. The class of employers, of landed proprietaries, will in a few years be very different from what it was heretofore in consequence of the general breaking up, a great many of the old slaveholders will be obliged to give up their lands and new men will step into their places; and 2. The employer will hardly control the vote of the negro laborer so far as to make him vote against his own liberty. The beneficial effect of an extension of suffrage does not always depend upon the intelligence with which the newly admitted voters exercise their right. . . The circumstances in which the freedmen of the south are placed are such that, when they only vote for their own liberty and rights, they vote for the rights of free labor, for the success of an immediate important reform, for the prosperity of the country, and for the general interests of mankind. If, therefore, in order to control the colored vote, the employer . . . is first obliged to concede to the freedman the great point of his own rights as a man and a free laborer, the great social reform is completed, the most difficult problem is solved. . .

I deem it proper, however, to offer a few remarks on the assertion frequently put forth, that the franchise is likely to be extended to the colored man by the voluntary action of the southern whites themselves. My observation leads me to a contrary opinion. Aside from a very few enlightened men, I found but one class of people in favor of the enfranchisement of the blacks: it was the class of Unionists who found themselves politically ostracised and looked upon the enfranchisement of the loyal negroes as the salvation of the whole loyal element. . . . The masses are strongly opposed to colored suffrage, and anybody that dares to advocate it is stigmatized as a dangerous fanatic. . . .

The only manner in which, in my opinion, the southern people can be induced to grant to the freedmen some measure of self-protecting power in the form of suffrage, is to make it a condition precedent to "readmission."

Negro Suffrage Will Come

Senate Ex. Doc. no. 43, 39 Cong., 1 Sess. Report of B. C. Truman to the President. [April 9, 1866]

So general and so bitter is the opposition of the whites to this measure, that I am fully persuaded that to confer suffrage forcibly, by national enactment, upon the blacks at this time, would result to their serious detriment. I do not believe it would beget a war of races, but, from the manner in which negro schools and other similar institutions have been treated in some sections by ignorant and malicious persons, I am constrained to believe that the negro would be the recipient of more wrongs and injuries than he now is if he was found at the polls voting. It is the truth of history that, when classes of population are opposed in feeling and unequal in power and influence, the dominating class is oppressive and intolerant toward the inferior in reverse proportion as it is elevated above it. The southern poor whites, conscious as they are of only a slight superiority over the negro, and knowing that the suffrage and a few minor factitious distinctions are the chief points of their superiority, are jealous over them accordingly. It is they that will resist most stubbornly the negroes' enfranchisement, as it will remove the most marked of the few slight barriers that separate them from the blacks, and it is they that will hail his advent to the polls with the most unrelenting and senseless abuse.

The proper avenues of approach to these unreasoning minds is through the wealthy and powerful landowners of the south — the politicians — who are lords and masters over the peasantry to almost as great an extent as they are over the negroes. . . . If the politicians of the south have the absolute certainty laid before them that in 1870 their representation in Congress will be diminished largely in consequence of the non-enfranchisement of the negro, they will see to it before that time that the proper reform is introduced. They will convince their constituents that it is necessary and proper to allow the negro to vote, and he will be allowed so to do. At present it seems to me that it would be a misfortune to the negro himself to thrust this privilege upon him. . . .

The southern negro is far less concerned in the result of elections, at present, than he is in the decisions of the local courts, and far less interested in these than in the general temper of society. The negro always has been and always must remain associated with the people of the south in a thousand intimate relations — relations over which legislation can have little control. . . . Even before the courts of the country I have little fear but that he will secure substantial justice. These courts are generally in the hands of the more intelligent and reasonable classes, among whom there is a sentiment of real pity towards the negro, as being now left to contend on his own resources against the stronger white man. Legislatures and common councils may frame mean-spirited and discriminating laws against him, but when he is brought to actual trial, and his helplessness is made apparent, the practice of his jurors, his judges, and his lawyers is much better than their professions. Especially is it true when the suit is, as it often happens, between a negro and a mean white. The old slave-owners always felt a preference for their negroes over this class, and even had a positive dislike towards the latter, and they entertain the same feelings still; and let a suit be brought between one of them and a respectable negro, and I have no fear for the result on the part of the negro. . . .

As an evidence of the most encouraging growth of public sentiment in the south, conforming to the great onward march of events, I may mention the advance that has taken place in relation to the question of negro testimony. Eight months ago, when I first went south, the subject was one that scarcely engaged the serious attention of public men, much less their favorable consideration; but when the Texas convention, the last in the south, and only very recently assembled, came together, so much had popular sentiment advanced on this subject that only eight members of that body offered any opposition to a measure proposing to allow the negro to testify in cases of his own concern, and nearly one-half the delegates favored giving him the most unrestricted right. A tremendous struggle was made over this last point — a struggle not for partial rights, but for universal privileges. The opponents of the measure strongly argued that if the negro was admitted to testify in all cases in which he or any of his race might be interested, his own rights were secured beyond peradventure, and he was legally placed on a better foundation than the white man, which is true; since, in Texas, a colored man can now subpoena witnesses both from whites and blacks, while a white man can summon only those of his own color. I know of no state among all that I visited in which either the constitution or statutes do not authorize the negro to testify in all cases in which he or any of his race may be interested.

“Loyalist” Opposition to Negro Suffrage

Report of Joint Committee on Reconstruction, part iii, p. 62. Testimony of M. J. Saffold, later a reconstructionist. Most “loyalists” opposed negro suffrage. [1866]

If you compel us to carry through universal suffrage of colored men over twenty-one years of age, . . . it will prove quite an incubus upon us in the organization of a national Union party of white men there; it will furnish our opponents with a very effective weapon of warfare against us; at the same time, I want it understood that I have no prejudice whatever against qualified negro suffrage. I think the government of the United States is committed, by all its past legislation, to the policy of exercising some restriction upon the right of universal suffrage. Foreigners have not been permitted to vote until after a certain term of residence in this country; minors have not been permitted to vote until arriving at a certain age. If the United States Government, then, recognizes the fact that some restrictions are necessary and proper, it would seem to me that in an immense mass of colored people, who have just now had the chains stricken from them, who have been kept down under an institution, one feature of which has been founded in a belief that ignorance added to their value as slaves, it would not be wise or proper to enfranchise the whole of them now.

The Negroes as Citizens

Report of Joint Committee on Reconstruction, part iv, p. 149. Testimony of Stephen Powers, traveling correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial. [1866]

NINE-TENTHS of the plantation negroes are living in a state of brutish ignorance, and have very little comprehension of the issues of this war, beyond the mere fact that they were set at liberty and were set free. The house servants, the hotel waiters, and the residents of the cities are much more intelligent, and in many cases have exhibited a very commendable degree of information in regard to the issues of the war. . . Four-fifths of the negroes in the south have no just comprehension of the franchises and privileges of a free citizen. But there has been much improvement in that respect since the Christmas holidays. I think I have never known of any more complete industrial and social revolution than was accomplished during those holidays. Up to that time the negroes had been thriftless, gay, improvident, and relying on what they confidently expected, the division of their old master's property at that time. They were, however, sorely disappointed, and for a time were discouraged and desponding. But they very soon recovered, however, in consequence of their natural buoyancy, and have applied themselves to work for themselves and their families with a great degree of industry. They have by this time a pretty thorough understanding that it is necessary for them to provide for themselves, and they are setting about in a rude, ignorant way, which is all that could have been expected of them.

As for the right of suffrage, and in many cases the right to testify in courts, they have the most vague and shadowy ideas. I conversed with many of them, particularly the plantation negroes, about the right of suffrage, and I found them afraid to speak of it, as though it was something that was not to be meddled with by them. The common remark among them was, that they did know anything about it, that "massa had never said anything to them about it." If they were led to the polls, I think the act of voting with them would be a merely physical act, and that it would be accomplished with very little appreciation.

PLANS, THEORIES, AND PROBLEMS OF RECONSTRUCTION

II

PLANS, THEORIES, AND PROBLEMS OF RECONSTRUCTION

INTRODUCTION

FROM the very beginning of the Civil War the question of Reconstruction was discussed by the northern political leaders. Yet the end of the War found them far from any agreement as to the proper mode of restoring the Union. Discussion had simply made clear some of the problems which were to be solved and afforded opportunity for the exposition of various plans for getting the South back into its former relations to the Union. Some of these problems were practical; some theoretical — all were of grave importance. Many of them arose out of the fact that our system of government is based on a written constitution to which all legislation is supposed to conform. Hence the leaders were puzzled by numerous questions of constitutional theory. What was a state? What were State Rights and what was the effect of war upon them? Were the states in or out of the Union, United States territories or conquered provinces? Could the states be punished for secession? Were the Southern people conquered foreigners or conquered rebels? Had they any rights under the Constitution or according to the laws of nations? What rights had Southern Unionists? What punishment should be inflicted and how could it be done legally? What was the status of slavery and of the negroes? Was the negro to be looked after by the states or by the United States? What rights had he? What should be the leading force in Reconstruction — Congress, or the Executive, or the Southern communities? Was the "Union as it was" under the old constitution to be restored, or had the war developed a new and stronger one? These were some of the problems and they were no nearer a solution in 1865 than in 1861.

Of the various plans and theories of Reconstruction the most important were: (1) The Presidential and Democratic theories as illustrated in the Crittenden-Johnson Resolutions of 1861, the speeches of the War Democrats, and the statements and acts of Presidents Lincoln and Johnson; (2) The State Suicide theory of Charles Sumner; (3) The Conquered Province theory of Thaddeus Stevens; (4) The Wade-Davis plan; (5) The so-called Southern Plan, as outlined in the Sherman-Johnston convention; and (6) The Forfeited Rights theory finally adopted by Congress. Other plans were suggested by prominent northern men such as Governor Andrew of Massachusetts and by southerners like Howell Cobb and Herschel V. Johnson. The leading negroes, the abolitionists, and the Unionists of the South, all had suggestions to offer and demands to make. Nearly all of the plans proposed had in them a large proportion of constitutional theory and each showed a certain disregard of actual conditions in the section that was to be reorganized. The theoretical problems and the controversies that arose out of them, rather than the practical problems, were responsible for the long delay in Reconstruction and for many of the mistakes and failures that were made.

I. LINCOLN'S PLANS AND SUGGESTIONS

Nullity of Secession

J. D. Richardson, Messages and Papers of the Presidents, vol. vi,
p. 7. From Lincoln's inaugural address. [March 4, 1861]

No State upon its mere motion can lawfully get out of the Union; resolves and ordinances to that effect are legally void. . . In view of the Constitution and the laws the Union is unbroken, and to the extent of my ability I shall take care, as the Constitution itself especially enjoins upon me, that the laws of the Union be faithfully executed in all the States.

Richardson, Messages and Papers, vol. vi, p. 213. [December 8, 1863]

Whereas in and by the Constitution of the United States it is provided that the President "shall have power to grant reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States, except in cases of impeachment;" and

Whereas a rebellion now exists whereby the loyal State Governments of several States have for a long time been subverted, and many persons have committed and are now guilty of treason against the United States; and

Whereas, with reference to said rebellion and treason, laws have been enacted by Congress declaring forfeitures and confiscation of property and liberation of slaves, all upon terms therein stated, and also declaring that the President was thereby authorized at any time thereafter, by proclamation, to extend to persons who may have participated in the existing rebellion in any State or part thereof pardon and amnesty, with such exceptions and at such times and on such conditions as he may deem expedient for the public welfare; and

Whereas the Congressional declaration for limited and conditional pardon accords with well-established judicial exposition of the pardoning power; and

Whereas, with reference to said rebellion, the President of the United States has issued several proclamations with provisions in regard to the liberation of slaves; and

Whereas it is now desired by some persons heretofore engaged in said rebellion to resume their allegiance to the United States and to reinaugurate loyal State governments within and for their respective States: Therefore —

I, ABRAHAM LINCOLN, President of the United States, do proclaim, declare, and make known to all persons who have, directly or by implication, participated in the existing rebellion, except as hereinafter excepted, that a full pardon is hereby granted to them and each of them, with restoration of all rights of property, except as to slaves, and in property cases where rights of third parties shall have intervened, and upon the condition that every such person shall take and subscribe an oath, and thenceforward keep and maintain said oath inviolate; and which oath shall be registered for permanent preservation, and shall be of the tenor and effect following, to-wit:—

“I, _____, do solemnly swear, in the presence of Almighty God, that I will henceforth faithfully support, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States and the Union of the States thereunder; and that I will in like manner, abide by and faithfully support all acts of Congress passed during the existing rebellion with reference to slaves, so long and so far as not repealed, modified, or held void by Congress, or by decision of the supreme court; and that I will, in like manner, abide by and faithfully support all proclamations of the President made during the existing rebellion having reference to slaves, so long and so far as not modified or declared void by decision of the supreme court. So help me God.”

The persons excepted from the foregoing provisions are all who are, or shall have been, military or naval officers of said so-called Confederate Government above the rank of colonel in the army or of lieutenant in the navy; all who left seats in the United States Congress to aid the rebellion; all who resigned commissions in the army or navy of the United States and afterwards aided the rebellion; and all who have engaged in any way in treating colored persons, or white persons in charge of such, otherwise than lawfully as prisoners of war, and which persons may have been found in the United States service as soldiers, seamen, or in any other capacity.

And I do further proclaim, declare, and make known that whenever, in any of the states of Arkansas, Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, South Carolina, and North Carolina, a number of persons, not less than one-tenth in number of the votes cast in such state at the presidential election of the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty, each having taken the oath aforesaid, and not having since violated it, and being a qualified voter by the election law of the state existing immediately before the so-called act of secession, and excluding all others, shall re-establish a state government which shall be republican, and in no wise contravening said oath, such shall be recognized as the true government of the state, and the state shall receive thereunder the benefits of the constitutional provision which declares that "the United States shall guaranty to every state in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion; and on application of the legislature, or the executive, (when the legislature cannot be convened), against domestic violence."

And I do further proclaim, declare, and make known that any provision which may be adopted by such state government in relation to the freed people of such state, which shall recognize and declare their permanent freedom, provide for their education, and which may yet be consistent as a temporary arrangement with their present condition as a laboring, landless, and homeless class, will not be objected to by the National Executive.

And it is suggested as not improper that, in constructing a loyal state government in any state, the name of the state, the boundary, the subdivisions, the constitution, and the general code of laws, as before the rebellion, be maintained, subject only to the modifications made necessary by the conditions here-inbefore stated, and such others, if any, not contravening said conditions, and which may be deemed expedient by those framing the new state government.

To avoid misunderstanding, it may be proper to say that this proclamation, so far as it relates to state governments, has no reference to states wherein loyal state governments have all the while been maintained. And, for the same reason, it may be proper to further say, that whether members sent to Congress from any state shall be admitted to seats constitutionally rests exclusively with the respective houses, and not to any extent with the Executive. And still further, that this proclamation is intended to present the people of the states wherein the national authority has been suspended, and loyal state governments have been subverted, a mode in and by which the national authority and loyal state governments may be re-established within said states, or in any of them; and while the mode presented is the best the Executive can suggest, with his present impressions, it must not be understood that no other possible mode would be acceptable.

Lincoln Suggests Negro Suffrage

Nicolay and Hay. Lincoln's Complete Works, vol. ii, p. 496. Letter to Governor Hahn of Louisiana. Used by permission of the Century Company. [March 13, 1864]

Now you are about to have a convention, which, . . . will probably define the elective franchise. I barely suggest, for your private consideration, whether some of the colored people may not be let in, as, for instance, the very intelligent, and especially those who have fought gallantly in our ranks. They would probably help, in some trying time to come, to keep the jewel of liberty within the family of freedom. But this is only a suggestion, not to the public, but to you alone.

Proclamation on the Wade-Davis Bill

Richardson, Messages and Papers, vol. vi, p. 223. [July 8, 1864]

AND whereas the said bill contains, among other things, a plan for restoring the states in rebellion to their proper practical relations in the Union, which plan expresses the sense of congress upon that subject, and which plan it is now thought fit to lay before the people for their consideration:

Now, therefore, I, ABRAHAM LINCOLN, President of the United States, do proclaim, declare, and make known, that, while I am (as I was in December last, when by proclamation I propounded a plan for restoration) unprepared by a formal approval of this bill, to be inflexibly committed to any single plan of restoration; and while I am also unprepared to declare that the free state constitutions and governments already adopted and installed in Arkansas and Louisiana shall be set aside and held for nought, thereby repelling and discouraging the loyal citizens who have set up the same as to further effort, or to declare a constitutional competency in congress to abolish slavery in states, but am at the same time sincerely hoping and expecting that a constitutional amendment abolishing slavery throughout the nation may be adopted, nevertheless I am fully satisfied with the system for restoration contained in the bill as one very proper plan for the loyal people of any state choosing to adopt it, and that I am, and at all times shall be, prepared to give the executive aid and assistance to any such people, so soon as the military resistance to the United States shall have been suppressed in any such state, and the people thereof shall have sufficiently returned to their obedience to the constitution and the laws of the United States, in which cases military governors will be appointed, with directions to proceed according to the bill.¹

Memorandum of Conditions of Peace

Johnson MSS. Unsigned paper given by Lincoln while in Richmond to J. A. Campbell, late Confederate Assistant Secretary of War. [April 5, 1865]

As to peace, I have said before, and now repeat, that three things are indispensable.

1. The restoration of the national authority, throughout all the States.

1. For the bill see page 118.

2. No receding by the Executive of the United States on the slavery question, from the position assumed thereon, in the late Annual Message to Congress, and in preceding documents.

3. No cessation of hostilities short of an end of the war, and the disbanding of all force hostile to the government.

That all propositions coming from those now in hostility to the government, and not inconsistent with the foregoing, will be respectfully considered, and passed upon in a spirit of sincere liberality.

I now add that it seems useless for me to be more specific with those who will not say they are ready for the indispensable terms, even on conditions to be named by themselves. If there be any who are ready for those indispensable terms, on any conditions whatever, let them say so, and state their conditions, so that such conditions can be distinctly known, and considered. It is further added that, the remission of confiscations being within the executive power, if the war be now further persisted in, by those opposing the government, the making of confiscated property at the least to bear the additional cost, will be insisted on; but that confiscations (except in cases of third party intervening interests) will be remitted to the people of any State which shall now promptly, and in good faith, withdraw its troops and other support, from further resistance to the government.

What is now said as to remission of confiscations has no reference to supposed property in slaves.

“A Merely Pernicious Abstraction”

Nicolay and Hay, Complete Works of Lincoln, vol. ii, p. 672. From Lincoln's last speech. Used by permission of the Century Company. [April 11, 1865]

IN the annual message of December, 1863, and in the accompanying proclamation, I presented a plan of reconstruction (as the phrase goes), which I promised, if adopted by any State, should be acceptable to and sustained by the executive government of the nation. I distinctly stated that this was not the

That all propositions coming from those now in hostility to the government and not inconsistent with the foregoing, will be perfectly considered and reasoned upon in a spirit of sincere liberality.

I now add that it presumes on me to be more specific with those who will not say they are ready for the indispensable terms, even on conditions to be only plan which might possibly be acceptable, and I also distinctly protested that the executive claimed no right to say when or whether members should be admitted to seats in Congress from such States. This plan was, in advance, submitted to the then Cabinet, and distinctly approved by every member of it. . .

[Regret has been expressed] that my mind has not seemed to be definitely fixed on the question whether the seceded States, so called, are in the Union or out of it. . . I have purposely forbore any public expression upon it. As it appears to me, that question has not been, nor yet is, a practically material one, and that any discussion of it while it thus remains practically immaterial, could have no effect other than the mischievous one of dividing our friends. As yet . . . that question is bad as a basis of controversy, and good for nothing at all — a merely pernicious abstraction.

We all agree that the seceded States, so called, are out of their proper practical relation with the Union, and that the sole object of the Government, civil and military, in regard to those States is to again get them into that proper practical relation. I believe that it is not only possible, but in fact easier, to do this without deciding or even considering whether these States have ever been out of the Union, than with it. Finding themselves safely at home, it would be utterly immaterial whether they had ever been abroad. Let us all join in doing the acts necessary to restore the proper practical relations between these States and the Union, and each forever after innocently indulge his own opinion whether in doing the acts he brought the States from without into the Union, or only gave them proper assistance, they never having been out of it.

So great peculiarities pertain to each State, and such important and sudden changes occur in the same State, and withal so new and unprecedented is the whole case, that no exclusive and inflexible plan can safely be prescribed as to details and collaterals. Such an exclusive and inflexible plan would surely become a new entanglement.

2. JOHNSON'S OPINIONS AND THEORIES

“Treason Must be Made Odious”

E. McPherson, Political History of Reconstruction, p. 46. From a speech made by Johnson in Nashville. [June 9, 1864]

TRAITORS should take a back seat in the work of restoration. If there be but five thousand men in Tennessee loyal to the Constitution, loyal to freedom, loyal to justice, these true and faithful men should control the work of re-organization and reformation absolutely. I say that the traitor has ceased to be a citizen, and in joining the rebellion has become a public enemy. He forfeited his right to vote with loyal men when he renounced his citizenship and sought to destroy our Government. . . . If we are so cautious about foreigners, who voluntarily renounce their homes to live with us what should we say to the traitor, who, although born and reared among us, has raised a parricidal hand against the Government which always protected him? My judgment is that he should be subjected to a severe ordeal before he is restored to citizenship. . . . Treason must be made odious, and traitors must be punished and impoverished. Their great plantations must be seized, and divided into small farms, and sold to honest, industrious men.

The States not Destroyed

Annual Cyclopaedia, 1865, p. 801. Speech to a delegation from Indiana. [April 21, 1865]

UPON this idea of destroying States my position has been heretofore well known, and I see no cause to change it now. . . . Some are satisfied with the idea that States are to be lost in territorial and other divisions — are to lose their character as States. But their life-breath has only been suspended, and it is a high constitutional obligation we have to secure each of these States in the possession and enjoyment of a republican form of Government. A State may be in the Government with a peculiar institution, and by the operation of a rebellion lose that feature. But it was a State when it went into a rebellion, and when it comes out without the institution it is still a State.

Functions of the States Suspended

Richardson, Messages and Papers, vol. vi, p. 357. From Message to Congress. Professor William A. Dunning has recently shown that this message was written by George Bancroft, the historian. See American Historical Review, April, 1906. [December 4, 1865]

THE true theory is that all pretended acts of secession were from the beginning null and void. The States can not commit treason nor screen the individual citizens who may have committed treason any more than they can make valid treaties or engage in lawful commerce with any foreign power. The States attempting to secede placed themselves in a condition where their vitality was impaired, but not extinguished; their functions suspended, but not destroyed.

Danger in Negro Suffrage

McPherson, History of Reconstruction, p. 49. An interview with G. L. Stearns. [October 3, 1865]

IT would not do to let the negro have universal suffrage now; it would breed a war of races. There was a time in the Southern States when the slaves of large owners looked down upon non-slave owners because they did not own slaves; . . . this has produced hostility between the mass of the whites and the negroes. The outrages are mostly from non-slave holding whites against the negro, and from the negro upon the non-slaveholding whites. The negro will vote with the late master, whom he does not hate, rather than with the non-slaveholding white, whom he does hate. Universal suffrage will create another war, not against us, but a war of races.

3. THEORIES AND PLANS OF CONGRESS

The Crittenden Resolutions

Congressional Globe, July 22, 1861. These resolutions adopted by the House of Representatives were introduced by Crittenden of Kentucky. Three days later Andrew Johnson of Tennessee introduced almost identical resolutions in the Senate. In both houses they were adopted by large majorities. [July 22, 1861]

Resolved, . . . That the present deplorable civil war has been forced upon the country by the disunionists of the southern States, now in arms against the constitutional government, and in arms around the capital; that in this national emergency, Congress, banishing all feelings of mere passion or resentment, will collect only its duty to the whole country; that this war is not waged on their part in any spirit of oppression, or for any purpose of conquest or subjugation, or purpose of overthrowing or interfering with the rights or established institutions of those States, but to defend and maintain the supremacy of the Constitution, and to preserve the Union with all the dignity, equality, and rights of the several States unimpaired; and that as soon as these objects are accomplished the war ought to cease.

The Wade-Davis Plan

Richardson, Messages and Papers, vol. vi, p. 223. This bill was sent to the President on July 2, 1864, but he withheld his approval and it failed to become a law. On July 8, after the adjournment of Congress, he issued a proclamation regarding reconstruction in which he offered to recognize any reconstruction that might be done in accord with the provisions of the Wade-Davis bill. [July 2, 1864]

Be it enacted, . . . That in the States declared in rebellion against the United States the President shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint for each a provisional governor, whose pay and emoluments shall not exceed that of a brigadier-general of volunteers, who shall be charged with the civil administration of such States until a State government therein shall be recognized as hereinafter provided.

Sec. 2. . . So soon as the military resistance to the United States shall have been suppressed in any such State and the people thereof shall have returned sufficiently to their obedience to the Constitution and the laws of the United States the provisional governor shall direct the marshal of the United States, as speedily as may be, to name a sufficient number of deputies, and to enroll all white male citizens of the United States resident in the State in their respective counties, and to request each one to take the oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and in his enrollment to designate those who take and those who refuse to take that oath, which rolls shall be forthwith returned to the provisional governor; and if the persons taking that oath shall amount to a majority of the persons enrolled in the State, he shall, by proclamation, invite the loyal people of the State to elect delegates to a convention charged to declare the will of the people of the State relative to the reestablishment of a State government, subject to and in conformity with the Constitution of the United States.}

Sec. 3. . . The convention shall consist of as many members as both houses of the last constitutional State legislature, apportioned by the provisional governor among the counties, parishes or districts of the State, in proportion to the white population returned as electors, by the marshal in compliance with the provisions of this act. The provisional governor shall, by proclamation, declare the number of delegates to be elected by each county, parish, or election district; name a day of election not less than thirty days thereafter; designate the places of voting in each county, parish, or district, conforming as nearly as may be convenient to the places used in the State elections next preceding the rebellion; appoint one or more commissioners to hold the election at each place of voting, and provide an adequate force to keep the peace during the election.

Sec. 4. . . The delegates shall be elected by the loyal white male citizens of the United States of the age of 21 years, and resident at the time in the county, parish, or district in which they shall offer to vote, and enrolled as aforesaid, or absent in the military service of the United States, and who shall take and subscribe the oath of allegiance to the United States in the form contained in the Act of Congress of July 2nd, 1862; and all such citizens of the United States who are in the military service of the United States shall vote at the headquarters of their respective commands, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the provisional governor for the taking and return of their votes; but no person who has held or exercised any office, civil or military, State or Confederate, under the rebel usurpation, or who has voluntarily borne arms against the United States, shall vote or be eligible to be elected as delegate at such election. >

Sec. 5. . . The said commissioners, or either of them, shall hold the election in conformity with this act, and, so far as may be consistent therewith, shall proceed in the manner used in the State prior to the rebellion. The oath of allegiance shall be taken and subscribed on the poll book by every voter in the form above prescribed, but every person known by or proved to the commissioners to have held any office, civil or military, State or Confederate, under the rebel usurpation, or to have voluntarily borne arms against the United States, shall be excluded though he offer to take the oath; and in case any person who shall have borne arms against the United States shall offer to vote, he shall be deemed to have borne arms voluntarily unless he can prove the contrary by the testimony of a qualified voter. > The poll book, showing the name and oath of each voter, shall be returned to the provisional governor by the commissioners of election, or the one acting, and the provisional governor shall canvass such returns and declare the person having the highest number of votes elected.

Sec. 6. . . The provisional governor shall, by proclamation, convene the delegates elected as aforesaid at the capital of the State on a day not more than three months after the election, giving at least thirty days' notice of such day. In case the said capital shall in his judgment be unfit, he shall in his proclamation appoint another place. He shall preside over the deliberations of the convention and administer to each delegate, before taking his seat in the convention, the oath of allegiance to the United States in the form above prescribed.

Sec. 7. . . The convention shall declare on behalf of the people of the State their submission to the Constitution and laws of the United States, and shall adopt the following provisions, hereby prescribed by the United States in the execution of the constitutional duty to guarantee a republican form of government to every State, and incorporate them in the constitution of the State. . .

<First. No person who has held or exercised any office, civil or military (except offices merely ministerial and military offices below the grade of colonel), State or Confederate, under the usurping power, shall vote for or be a member of the legislature or governor.>

Second. Involuntary servitude is forever prohibited, and the freedom of all persons is guaranteed in said State.

Third. No debt, State or Confederate, created by or under the sanction of the usurping power shall be recognized or paid by the State.

Sec. 8. . . When the convention shall have adopted those provisions it shall proceed to reëstablish a republican form of government and ordain a constitution containing those provisions, which, when adopted, the convention shall by ordinance provide for submitting to the people of the State entitled to vote under this law, at an election to be held in the manner prescribed by the act for the election of delegates, but at a time and place named by the convention, at which election, the said electors, and none others, shall vote directly for or against such constitution and form of State government. And the returns of said election shall be made to the provisional governor, who shall canvass the same in the presence of the electors, and if a majority of the votes cast shall be for the constitution and form of government, he shall certify the same, with a copy thereof, to the President of the United States, who, after obtaining the consent of Congress, shall, by proclamation, recognize the government so established, and none other, as the constitutional government of the State; and from the date of such recognition, and not before, Senators and Representatives and electors for President and Vice-President may be elected in such State, according to the laws of the State and of the United States.

Sec. 9. . . If the convention shall refuse to reestablish the State government on the conditions aforesaid the provisional governor shall declare it dissolved; but it shall be the duty of the President, whenever he shall have reason to believe that a sufficient number of the people of the State entitled to vote under this act, in number not less than a majority of those enrolled as aforesaid, are willing to reestablish a State government on the conditions aforesaid, to direct the provisional governor to order another election of delegates to a convention for the purpose and in the manner prescribed in this act, and to proceed in all respects as hereinbefore provided, either to dissolve the convention or to certify the State government reestablished by it to the President.

Sec. 10. . . Until the United States shall have recognized a republican form of State government the provisional governor in each of said States shall see that this act and the laws of the United States and the laws of the State in force when the State government was overthrown by the rebellion are faithfully executed within the State; but no law or usage whereby any person was heretofore held in involuntary servitude shall be recognized or enforced by any court or officer in such State; and the laws for the trial and punishment of white persons shall extend to all persons, and jurors shall have the qualifications of voters under this law for delegates to the convention. The President shall appoint such officers provided for by the law of the State when its government was overthrown as he may find necessary to the civil administration of the State, all which officers shall be entitled to receive the fees and emoluments provided by the State laws for such officers.

Sec. 11. . . Until the recognition of a State government as aforesaid the provisional governor shall, under such regulations as he may prescribe, cause to be assessed, levied, and collected, for the year 1864 and every year thereafter, the taxes provided by the laws of such State to be levied during the fiscal year preceding the overthrow of the State government thereof, in the manner prescribed by the laws of the State, as nearly as may be; and the officers appointed as aforesaid are vested with all powers of levying and collecting such taxes, by distress or sale, as were vested in any officers or tribunal of the State government aforesaid for those purposes. The proceeds of such taxes shall be accounted for to the provisional governor and be by him applied to the expenses of the administration of the laws in such State, subject to the direction of the President, and the surplus shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of such State, to be paid to the State upon an appropriation therefor to be made when a republican form of government shall be recognized therein by the United States.

Sec. 12. . . All persons held to involuntary servitude or labor in the States aforesaid are hereby emancipated and discharged therefrom, and they and their posterity shall be forever free. And if any such persons or their posterity shall be restrained of liberty under pretense of any claim to such service or labor, the courts of the United States shall, on habeas corpus, discharge them.

Sec. 13. . . If any person declared free by this act, or any law of the United States or any proclamation of the President, be restrained of liberty with intent to be held in or reduced to involuntary servitude or labor, the person convicted before a court of competent jurisdiction of such act shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,500 and be imprisoned not less than five nor more than twenty years.

Sec. 14. . . Every person who shall hereafter hold or exercise any office, civil or military (except offices merely ministerial and military offices below the grade of colonel), in the rebel service, State or Confederate, is hereby declared not to be a citizen of the United States.

The "Forfeited Rights" Plan

Report of Joint Committee on Reconstruction, p. xiii. From the majority report. This was the theory finally acted upon by Congress in reconstructing the Southern States. [June 20, 1866]

YOUR committee came to the consideration of the subject referred to them with the most anxious desire to ascertain what was the condition of the people of the States recently in insurrection, and what, if anything, was necessary to be done before restoring them to the full enjoyment of all their original privileges. It was undeniable that the war into which they had plunged the country had materially changed their relations to the people of the loyal States. Slavery had been abolished by constitutional amendment. A large proportion of the population had become, instead of mere chattels, free men and citizens. Through all the past struggle these had remained true and loyal, and had, in large numbers, fought on the side of the Union. It was impossible to abandon them, without securing them their rights as free men and citizens. . . Hence it became important to inquire what could be done to secure their rights, civil and political. It was evident to your committee that adequate security could only be found in appropriate constitutional provisions. By an original provision of the Constitution, representation is based on the whole number of free persons in each State, and three-fifths of all other persons. When all become free, representation for all necessarily follows. As a consequence the inevitable effect of the rebellion would be to increase the political power of the insurrectionary States, whenever they should be allowed to resume their position as States of the Union. . . It did not seem just or proper that all the political advantages derived from their becoming free should be confined to their former masters, who had fought against the Union, and withheld from themselves, who had always been loyal. . . Doubts were entertained whether Congress had power, even under the amended Constitution, to prescribe the qualifications of voters in a State, or could act directly on the subject. It was doubtful . . . whether the States would consent to surrender a power they had always exercised, and to which they were attached. As the best if not the only method of surmounting the difficulty, and as eminently just and proper in itself, your committee came to the conclusion that political power should be possessed in all the States exactly in proportion as the right of suffrage should be granted, without distinction of color or race. This it was thought would leave the whole question with the people of each State, holding out to all the advantage of increased political power as an inducement to allow all to participate in its exercise. Such a provision would be in its nature gentle and persuasive, and would lead, it was hoped, at no distant day, to an equal participation of all, without distinction, in all the rights and privileges of citizenship, thus affording a full and adequate protection to all classes of citizens, since all would have, through the ballot-box, the power of self-protection. . .

From the time these Confederate States thus withdrew their representation in Congress and levied war against the United States, the great mass of the people became and were insurgents, rebels, traitors, and all of them assumed and occupied the political, legal, and practical relation of enemies of the United States. . . their people reduced to the condition of enemies, conquered in war, entitled only by public law to such rights, privileges, and conditions as might be vouchsafed by the conqueror. . .

Having reduced themselves . . . to the condition of public enemies, they have no right to complain of temporary exclusion from Congress; but on the contrary, having voluntarily renounced the right to representation, and disqualified themselves by crime from participating in the Government, the burden now rests upon them . . . to show that they are qualified to resume federal relations. . . They must prove that they have established, with the consent of the people, republican forms of government in harmony with the Constitution and laws of the United States, that all hostile purposes have ceased, and should give adequate guarantees against future treason and rebellion. . .

Having by this treasonable withdrawal from Congress, and by flagrant rebellion and war, forfeited all civil and political rights and privileges under the Constitution, they can only be restored thereto by the permission and authority of that constitutional power against which they rebelled and by which they were subdued. . .

The powers of conqueror are not so vested in the President that he can fix and regulate the terms of settlement and confer congressional representation on conquered rebels and traitors. Nor can he in any way, qualify enemies of the Government to exercise its lawmaking power. The authority to restore rebels to political power in the Federal Government can be exercised only with the concurrence of all the departments in which political power is vested. . .

If the President may, at his will, and under his own authority, whether as military commander or chief executive, qualify persons to appoint Senators and elect Representatives, and empower others to appoint and elect them, he thereby practically controls the organization of the legislative department. The constitutional form of government is thereby practically destroyed, and its powers absorbed in the Executive. . .

With such evidence before them, it is the opinion of your committee —

I. That the States lately in rebellion were, at the close of the war, disorganized communities, without civil government, and without constitutions or other forms, by virtue of which political relations could legally exist between them and the federal government.

II. That Congress cannot be expected to recognize as valid the election of representatives from disorganized communities, which, from the very nature of the case, were unable to present their claim to representation under those established and recognized rules, the observance of which has been hitherto required.

III. That Congress would not be justified in admitting such communities to a participation in the government of the country without first providing such constitutional or other guarantees as will tend to secure the civil rights of all citizens of the republic; a just equality of representation; protection against claims founded in rebellion and crime; a temporary restoration of the right of suffrage to those who had not actively participated in the efforts to destroy the Union and overthrow the government, and the exclusion from positions of public trust of, at least, a portion of those whose crimes have proved them to be enemies to the Union, and unworthy of public confidence.

4. SOUTHERN VIEWS ON RECONSTRUCTION

Suggestions by Howell Cobb

Johnson MSS. Letter from Gen. Howell Cobb to Gen. J. H. Wilson, written at the request of the latter, for transmission to the President. Cobb, before the war, was a member of Congress from Georgia, Speaker of the House, governor of Georgia, Secretary of the Treasury. During the Civil War he was in the Confederate Congress and later a general in the Confederate army.

[June 14, 1865]

I WAS a secessionist, and counselled the people of Georgia to secede. When the adoption of that policy resulted in War, I felt it my duty to share in the privations of the struggle, and accordingly at the commencement of the contest, I entered the army. . . I was an earnest supporter of the cause throughout the struggle. Upon the surrender of General Johnston I regarded the contest at an end, and have since that time conformed my action to that conviction. . .

The contest has ended in the subjugation of the South. The parties stand towards each other in the relative positions of conqueror and conquered; and the question for statesmen to decide, is, the policy and duty of the respective parties. With the latter the course is plainly marked out alike by the requirements of duty and necessity. . . A return to the peaceful and quiet employments of life; obedience to the constitution and laws of the United States; and the faithful discharge of all the duties, and obligations, imposed upon them by the new state of things, constitute their plain and simple duty.

The policy to be adopted by the other party, is not so easily determined. . . The hour of triumph, is not necessarily, an hour for calm reflection, or wise judgments. . .

In the adoption of the policy, which the Government will pursue towards the people of the South, there are two matters which present themselves for primary and paramount consideration. 1st, the present condition of things in the South. 2nd, the state of things it is desirable to produce, and the best mode of doing it. . .

FACSIMILE OF FIRST PAGE OF GENERAL HOWELL COBB'S LETTER ON RECONSTRUCTION, JUNE 14, 1865

[From original MS. in Library of Congress]

The whole country [South] has been more or less devastated. Their physical condition in the loss of property, and the deprivation of the comforts of life . . . is as bad, as their worst enemy could desire. If left to employ all their resources . . . it would require much time to recover from the effects of a devastating war. The abolition of slavery not only deprives them of a large property, but revolutionizes the whole system of agricultural labor; and must necessarily retard the restoration of former prosperity. So completely has this institution been interwoven with the whole frame work of society, that its abolition involves a revision, and modification of almost every page of the Statute books of the States, where it has existed. It is with a people, thus depressed in mind, seriously injured in estate, and surrounded by embarrassing questions of the greatest magnitude, that the Government has to deal. . . . The avowed object of the Government was to restore the Union. The successful termination of the war has effected that result, so far as further resistance on the part of the South is concerned. The people of the South, being prepared to conform to that result, all else for the restoration of the Union is in the hands of the Government.

Looking to the future interests not only of the southern people, but of the whole country, it is desirable that the bitter animosities . . . should be softened, as much as possible: and a devastated country restored . . . to comparative prosperity. To effect these results requires the exercise of virtues, which the history of the World shows, are not often, if ever found, in the hearts of the conquerors, magnanimity and generosity. The World is sadly in need of such an example. Let the United States furnish it. There never was a more fitting opportunity. It will never be followed by more satisfactory results. . . .

The prejudices and passions which have been aroused in this contest, crimsoned in the blood of loved ones, from every portion of the land, will yield only to the mellowing influences of time, — and the youngest participant in the struggle will scarcely live to see the last shadow pass away. It is for those in whose hands, the power is entrusted, to deal with a brave and generous though conquered people, in such a spirit, as will most certainly and speedily ensure the desired result. The confidence of such a people can be won by kindness and generosity. I leave it for those who counsel a different policy, to foreshadow the effects of a contrary course. They may be able to see, how more blood, and more suffering will sooner restore kindlier feelings. I cannot. In the sufferings already endured, and the privations of the present, there appears to me ample atonement, to satisfy the demands of those, who would punish the South for the past. For the security of the future no such policy is required.

Giving to these general principles the form of practical recommendation, I would say that, all prosecutions and penalties should cease, against those who stand charged alone with the offense of being parties to, and supporters of the southern cause. . . The time for the exercise of this power of general amnesty with which the President is clothed, will arrive when he is satisfied, that the people of the South have abandoned the contest, and have in good faith returned to their allegiance to the United States. . . In such a policy there would be exhibited a spirit of magnanimity, which would find its reward in the happiest results.

If my voice could be heard in the councils of the Government . . . I should seek to restore concord and good feeling by extending it to those, from whom I asked it in return; and by a course of generous confidence to win the willing and cheerful support of those whose loyalty and allegiance when thus won, could be relied upon. No man will doubt, that the man who is received back into the Union, and feels, that he has been subjected to no severe penalty, and been required to submit to no humiliating test, will make a truer and better citizen, than the one who feels that his citizenship has been obtained by submitting to harsh and degrading terms, which he was compelled to yield to, to secure the rights he has acquired. . . Secure the honest loyalty of the people, by extending to them a generous confidence, but do not ask them to win your confidence, by losing their own self respect. . .

By the abolition of slavery . . . a state of things has been produced, well calculated to excite the most serious apprehensions with the people of the South. I regard the result as unfortunate both for the white and black. The institution of slavery, in my judgment provided the best system of labor that could be devised for the negro race. . . . It is due both to the white population and the negroes that the present state of things, should not remain. You will find that our people are fully prepared to conform to the new state of things; and . . . will be disposed to pursue towards the negroes, a course dictated by humanity and kindness. I take it for granted, that the future relations, between the negroes and their former owners, like all other questions of domestic policy, will be under the control and direction of the State Governments. . . . For the remainder of the present year, there may not be very serious troubles, but there should be a more certain and well defined system for the future, than can be enforced under military regulations which are necessarily vague and indefinite; and do not meet many questions that arise. . . .

Whilst there has been no action on the part of the Government to justify it, there is a serious apprehension felt, that a system of taxation is contemplated which will impose such burthens upon the people, as they cannot meet; and will end in the virtual confiscation of their estates. . . . In the collections of any taxes the fact that there is no money in the hands of the people, and no means of obtaining it at an early day, should be remembered. Time should be given to tax payers to obtain the necessary funds, and thus save the remnants of their former estates. . . .

I am fully conscious of the fact, that what I have said, is subject to the criticism of proceeding from an interested party. This is true. I am interested, deeply interested in the question, not so much for myself, for I have no future, but for my family, my friends, my countrymen — but we are not the only persons interested in the solution of this great problem which stands in the history of the world, without precedent or parallel. . . . So is every man who feels an interest in the future not of the South only, but of the whole country.

Herschel V. Johnson on Reconstruction

Johnson MSS. Letter from Johnson to H. M. Watterson, at the request of the latter, for transmission to the President. Johnson, before the Civil War, had been U. S. Senator, justice of the Georgia Supreme Court and governor of Georgia. He was candidate for vice president on the Douglas ticket in 1860. As a member of the Confederate Congress he had favored negotiations for peace. In 1865 he was president of the Georgia Constitutional Convention.

[October 28, 1865]

AFTER the States shall have organized their governments on the basis indicated by the President, I would be pleased, if he would publish a Proclamation to the effect that they are entitled to representation in Congress, provided they should elect Senators and Representatives constitutionally qualified to hold seats in the two respective branches. . . It would not only delight the Southern States, but, in my judgment, it would be a stroke of masterly policy. For being constitutionally qualified, no party in the North can be sustained who will advocate their rejection.

Such a proclamation will present the issue distinctly, in advance of the assembling of Congress, whether the Union can be fully restored upon Constitutional grounds. This involves two distinct advantages. First, it will elicit the popular will in time to produce a salutary effect upon the members of Congress from the Northern and Western States and thus develop the strength of the Conservative element in those states. Secondly, The radicals, who intend to make war on the President, will have to accept the issue thus tendered, of restoration and reconstruction upon the basis of the Constitution and force them to take the initiative in the warfare. The rejection of Southern members and senators on the basis of the Constitutional qualifications, is revolutionary in its tendency and must bring upon its authors, the odium of perpetuating a disunion, which they have fought nearly five years to prevent. They, in a word, become the disunion party. . .

The Treasury Department is taking steps to collect internal revenue. This will destroy our people, if the valuation of property according to the assessment of 1860 is adhered to. It ought to be remembered that the tax-paying capacity of our people is exhausted. Property is not actually worth one-fourth of the valuation of 1860. The people are without money and they have nothing to sell. I beg you to appeal to the President in our behalf on this subject. Ask him, for the sake of justice, to cause the valuation of 1860 to be abandoned and to assess the tax according to its present value. We may possibly be able to pay on this basis — but the basis of 1860 will ruin thousands, the large majority of whom are widows and orphans and . . . men of small means. . .

Clothed with as much power of patronage as is the President, I have no doubt of his ability, by legitimate means, to induce the Clerk of the H. R., in calling the roll of the states, to call the late seceding States. This is of vast importance in the work of restoration. For it puts all on an equality before the House is organized and gives all an opportunity to vote for Speaker. In such a condition of things the Southern States would have great power for good.

You may say to the President, with the most perfect confidence, that he can withdraw military power from Georgia as soon as he pleases. All is safe. Our Legislature will do justice and give ample protection to the freedman. The people . . . will, in good faith, maintain the peace, adhere to the Union and obey the laws and Constitution.

5. UNIONIST PLANS

Observations of a Union Leaguer

Johnson MSS. Letter of A. Watson of Tennessee to President Johnson.
[April 17, 1865]

THE city of Washington is spotted with rebels. . . Not only are rebels in the streets, and in every kind of business, but they are in every department, and even in and around the White House. Shall this thing continue, or will you, like the fabled Hercules, clean the Augean stables. This kind of filth has been accumulating for four long years, until it stinks in the nostrils of every loyal man. Shall it be cleaned out thoroughly, and the atmosphere of the National Capital be made as loyal and sweet as the air from a new blown rose. . .

If there was a grievous fault in Mr. Lincoln's administration it was in the fostering of his enemies, and the discarding of his friends. In fattening rebels, and starving those who had elevated him to power. . . Rebels were fostered and fattened . . until rebellion was made respectable by its numbers and its wealth, the air of this city was filled with it. . . Mr. Lincoln to placate these aristocrats . . has given them place and power, which they have constantly used against him, and his friends. . . He has fallen a victim to mistaken clemency, and to the policy of buying his enemies . . and to the discarding of his friends, and their advice. . . "He that is not for me is against me" — and "no man can serve two masters" are aphorisms not only of the scriptures, but equally admitted by all mankind.

In every department of the government in this city and elsewhere more than half are opposed to the principles enunciated by the Baltimore convention which elevated Mr. Lincoln and yourself to power. They not only receive the money of the government, but are in high official position giving tone to public opinion here and elsewhere, and are using their positions to defeat the policy of the Administration, and shield rebels from just and merited punishment. . .

There is but one true policy of government in this country, which is "to the victors belong the control." . . Any other policy is a fraud upon the people and the party which gave to the nominees their votes. Mr. Lincoln's administration attempted the impossible policy of running the Train of Freedom, with Slavery Conductors, and giving them plenty of money, if they would not smash the cars. They did not destroy the Company because it was too strong and too rich, but they destroyed its President. . .

No such system can ever succeed. We have escaped by the merest accident, and now . . shall we allow these men to again put our lives, and the lives of the nation in peril. . . I trust that the Machinery of State will be put in the hands and under the control of its friends, who are alone competent to run it smoothly and safely. Not a man should be employed, unless he is one of our friends and the known enemy of the rebellion. Only in this way can you, and we, and the nation be entirely safe. "He that is not for us is against us." — All such should be driven from power at once. . . [The Union] League is strong in this city and if permitted will assist you in clearing rebels out of the departments, and out of every part of the city. . .

Some of the most prominent men of the League ask of you an interview, at some convenient period, that we may orally communicate in full the state of things in this city. We are long residents here and know nearly all of the prominent men in power, and especially the rank and file of the office holders, and are better calculated to point out the disloyal, than any other body of men here. We know thousands of rebels in office, and will give you their names, and the evidence, if you will see that they are removed. Believing that you will thus act has prompted me to write you this hasty letter, as from your speeches we are of opinion that rebels may now be forced out of office and into the obscurity which they merited four years ago. Better late than never, and it is never too late to do good . .

if you will grant us an interview we can assist you very materially in setting the ship of state on the right course, so as to avoid the rocks which stranded the last one.

"A Loyalist's" Demands

Report of Joint Committee on Reconstruction, pt. iii, p. 12. Statement of William H. Smith, of Alabama, a prominent deserter from the Confederacy. [1866]

THE rebels have had all that in their hands, and they think they have power again, and it emboldens them. . . They say they will soon have the control of the country again; that they will have a united south, and with the democratic party in the north, and the President to help them, they will soon have the control of the whole country again. I was talking with Governor Parsons the other day . . . I am satisfied he has gone over to the rebels. I said to him . . . "Governor, the course we should pursue here is to make war on these rebels. As for the poor, deluded common soldiers, I have sympathy for them; but as for the rest, we must put them down. The people must blame some one for this great wrong, and if the government does not put a mark on the leading rebels and blame them, the people will blame the government. But if these men are rewarded for their treason against the government, the plain, simple-minded men will say that the government must be satisfied that they have not done wrong or it would not reward them." "Well," said the governor, "I agree to that; but let us wait until we get the State reconstructed." "What do you mean by that?" I replied. "Do you mean, wait until these men are all in power? That would be too late. We Union men will then all be driven out of the country."

6. SOME ABOLITIONIST VIEWS

Gerrit Smith's "Thoughts for the People"

Johnson MSS. A public letter printed as a broadside. [April 19, 1865]

LET the first condition of Peace with them be that no people in the Rebel States shall ever either lose or gain civil or political rights by reason of their race or origin. God would have no right, social, ecclesiastical, nor any other, turn on such peculiarities. But to apply this condition of Peace to any other than civil and political rights would be manifestly improper. . . A Peace, which denies the ballot to the black man, would be war: — and perhaps the worst of wars — a war of races.

Let the next condition of Peace be that our black allies in the South — those saviors of our nation — shall share with their poor white neighbors in the subdivisions of the large landed estates of the South. And this, not merely to compensate them for what we owe them: — and not merely because they are destitute of property: — and not merely because they have ever been robbed of their earnings and denied the acquisition of property: — but, more than all these, because the title to the soil of the whole South is equitably in them, who have ever tilled it, and profusely shed upon it their sweat and tears and blood. . .

Let the only other condition be that the rebel masses shall not, for, say, a dozen years, be allowed access to the ballot-box, or be eligible to office; and that the like restrictions be for life on their political and military leaders. Without such restrictions there would be no safety for either the blacks or loyal whites of the South; and no adequate security against the nation's sinking into a condition worse in some respects than that from which she is now emerging. Without such restrictions our ingratitude to the blacks would be as signal as is their magnanimity in forgiving us, and in serving and saving us at personal risks greater than white men could possibly incur.

I do not say that I would have all black men vote. I certainly would, were the rebels allowed to vote. But, with the proposed restrictions on rebel suffrage, I would be quite content that none, black or white, who cannot read their vote, should be permitted to cast it. As a general principle and in ordinary circumstances, I would not have the ability to read a qualification for voting. . .

The President [Lincoln] would have the Louisiana Constitution [1864] confer suffrage on colored men, if they are "very intelligent," or if they "serve our cause as soldiers." But would he make these the conditions of voting on the part of the Southern whites also? With such impartial conditions there would be more black than white voters in the South. . . The mass of the Southern blacks fall, in point of intelligence, but little, if any, behind the mass of the Southern whites. But I pass from this comparison to say that, in reference to the qualifications of the voter, men make too much account of the head and too little of the heart. The ballot-box, like God, says: "Give me thy heart." The best-hearted men are the best qualified to vote: and, in this light, the blacks, with their characteristic gentleness, patience and affectionateness, are peculiarly entitled to vote. We cannot wonder at Swedenborg's belief that the celestial people will be found in the interior of Africa: nor hardly can we wonder at the legend, that the gods came down every year to sup with their favorite Africans. . .

I shall be asked, if I would have none of the rebels, not even their guiltiest leaders, doomed to death? I answer, no — not any of them: nor any of them to imprisonment, nor any of them to banishment. . .

1st. Because the masses of the Southern whites do . . . love their leaders, and would therefore sympathize with their sufferings, and be soured, if not exasperated, by them. . . Such a state of mind would be very unfavorable for their experience of those happy changes of character, which are so needful for the nation's as well as their own welfare.

2d. Because these masses would be ever and deeply grateful to the Government whose remarkable clemency had spared those leaders from the penalty of their crimes.

3d. Because these leaders are not so depraved but what they themselves . . . might be won to love our kind and forgiving Government, and to feel and confess the boundless wrong of having risen up against it.

4th. Because the heart of the whole world would be softened, and all its civilizations improved by such an absence of revenge, and by such pity for those, who had done so much to provoke revenge.

5th. Because monarchists would justly ascribe to the educating power of our free institutions this unprecedentedly generous treatment of the greatest offenders, and would be touched with shame for their disparagement and defamation of those institutions.

6th. Because the civilization of our Northern States — which, but for the barbarizing influences of slavery, had been, if indeed it is not now, of a higher type than that enjoyed by any other people — would call for all this pity. It would be called for by that same civilization, which did not respond to the clamors for the retaliatory starvation and murder of prisoners. Just here, we see that a highly civilized people are at great disadvantage in carrying on a war with a pre-eminently barbarous one. The South could starve and murder prisoners: but the North could not. . .

7th. But for a reason weightier than any or all other reasons, would I have the North deal kindly and mercifully. . . The slaveholding spirit brought on this war. But the North, as well as the South is responsible for generating and fostering this spirit. . . The trade, politics and religion of the North were in the service of slavery.

Gerrit Smith Advises Leniency

Johnson MSS. An open letter to President Johnson. [April 24, 1865]

ONLY ten days ago, and the country felt sure of an immediate Peace. . . To-day there is a strong and wide-spread fear that Peace is afar off. Whence this great change? It comes from the assassination of Abraham Lincoln, and from your taking his place.

1st. For, whilst the incessant demand for a rigorous and bloody policy toward the conquered rebels met with no response in the remarkable kindness and compassion of Mr. Lincoln, it is apprehended that there may be qualities in yourself to which such a policy . . . would be entirely welcome. Then by your contact with the Rebellion — by your personal observation of its crimes, and especially by what you and your family and friends had suffered from those crimes — your temper, unless marvellously controlled, could not have failed to be excited, and to call for the severest punishment on the leaders of the Rebellion.

2d. Whilst Mr. Lincoln was yet alive, Government was incessantly called on by presses and public meetings, by sermons saturated with the vindictive and blood-thirsty spirit of the Jewish theology, and by voices innumerable, not to spare these leading rebels. No wonder then, that the manner of his death is made use of to increase the thirst for their blood. For, absurd as is the charge, that the assassin was their tool, it nevertheless gains extended credence. They all knew Mr. Lincoln's characteristic clemency, and that the terms of the Peace he was intent on were exceedingly mild. Hence, how insane is the supposition that any of them sought his death! . . .

But there was another and no less conclusive argument, for conducting the contest with our enemy on the most liberal and humane principles. It was that it is reasonable as well as charitable to conclude, not only that there must, in order to move such vast numbers, be their sincere belief in their cause, but that, considering how many wise and good men there are amongst them, their cause, however lacking it may be in soundness, must have a strong semblance of soundness. And such it, in fact, has. The Constitutional right of "Secession," which is their cause, has from the first been extensively believed in. Even Jefferson and Madison favored it, more or less directly. Nearly the whole South had come to believe it; and no small part of the North. It is true, that the American people have now put their final and effectual veto upon this doctrine of "Secession." They have done this, not only on the battle-field, but at the ballot-box also. . . Nevertheless, not to let the extended conviction, at the North as well as at the South, present as well as past, of the truth of the doctrine, mitigate in some degree the crime of the mad-clinging of the Southern people to it, is to betray a great and guilty insensibility to the claims of reason, candor and charity. He is not a right-hearted man, who can read without sorrow for General Lee, and without some measure of excuse for him, the accounts of his hesitating between the claims of his country and of his Virginia to his paramount allegiance. Charge the General with guilt for choosing Calhoun instead of Webster for his expounder of the Constitution. But admit it to be his misfortune more than his guilt that . . . he grew up under the teachings of Jefferson and Madison, instead of those of Washington and Hamilton and Jay. Candor will allow the like plea even for Jefferson Davis. Let him who "is without sin" — this sin of taking as a political authority not Calhoun merely, but even Jefferson or Madison — "let him first cast a stone at" Jefferson Davis. . . Neither [North nor South] can put the entire blame of the War upon the other. Hence neither is to punish the other: — but both are to forgive each other. God says to the North, as well as to the South: "Go, and sin no more." . .

I cannot doubt that [peace is remote] if the severe policy toward the conquered rebels . . . shall be adopted. . . For once let it be known that the leading rebels, who shall fall into our hands, will be doomed to punishment . . . and immediately, amongst their followers, sympathy with them and rage against us will know no bounds. . . In that state of things a guerilla warfare would ensue, which . . . might run through many years, harrassing and wasting our armies, and adding fearfully, if not fatally, to our already vast debt. . . A people, however great, should beware of driving to desperation a people however small. . . Moreover, if our Government shall be guilty of what seems to be bad faith or cruelty toward the conquered rebels, would there not be a disaffection at the North far more alarming than that hitherto manifested? . . .

But how blessed would be the consequences of a wise and kind treatment of that enemy! Then the South would be at Peace with the North; would soon learn to like her; and would soon welcome the tens of thousands of families, that would immediately begin to emigrate from the North to the South? Then the North and the South . . . would rapidly become one in interest, and one also in character. . . . The South has suffered enough, and she deserves to be soothed and comforted, and no more afflicted, by us.

Chief Justice Chase on Negro Suffrage

Johnson MSS. Chase to President Johnson. Chase was then in South Carolina on a tour through the South. [May 7, 1865]

GENERAL Sherman is greatly dissatisfied with the publication of the projected Convention with Johnson & the reasons for disapproval. . . .

He is thoroughly persuaded of the superior merits of the plan of reorganization, which was initiated by General Weitzel's order at Richmond, & applied more extensively by the proposed Convention. He does [not] seem to take into account the great changes produced by the conversion of slaves into free citizens; which alone are sufficient to make honorable reorganization through rebel authorities impossible.

My detention here has enabled me to see a good deal of the Citizens. . . . All agree that Slavery is at an end, and acquiesce fully in the order of Gen. Schofield, which I enclose, declaring that all persons in North Carolina, who were held as slaves, were made free by the Proclamation of Emancipation and must be upheld in their rights as freemen. As to the extension of Suffrage to loyal blacks I find that readiness and even desire for it is in proportion to the loyalty of those who express opinions. Nobody dissents, vehemently; while those who have suffered from rebellion and rejoice with their whole hearts in the restoration of the National Authority, are fast coming to the conclusion they will find their own surest safety in the proposed extension. Among these last I have found no one more enlightened or truly patriotic than Col. James H. Taylor formerly the holder of more than a hundred slaves.

All seem embarrassed about first steps. I do not entertain the slightest doubt that they would all welcome some simple recommendation from yourself, and would adopt readily any plan which you would suggest. They would receive, without resistance from any and with real joy in many hearts, an order for the enrollment of all loyal citizens without regard to complexion, with a view to reorganization. This would be regarded by all not as an interference but a facility, so far as the order should relate to Enrollment of whites, and with almost universal acquiescence and with favor by the best citizens, in its whole scope. . . .

I am anxious that you should have the honor of the lead in this work. It is my deliberate judgment that nothing will so strengthen you with the people or bring so much honor to your name throughout the world as some such short address as I suggested before leaving Washington. Just say to the People "reorganize your state governments: I will aid you by enrollment of the loyal citizens; you will not expect me to discriminate among men equally loyal; once enrolled vote for delegates to the Convention to reform your State Constitution: I will aid you in collecting and declaring their suffrages; your Convention and yourselves must do the rest; but you may count on the support of the National Government in all things constitutional [ly] expedient." This will terminate all discussion. The disloyal men will feel that the argument is closed and will at once conform themselves to the new order.

7. CHARLES SUMNER'S "STATE SUICIDE" THEORY

The Effect of Secession is the Destruction of the State

Congressional Globe, February 11, 1862, p. 736.

1. Resolved, That any vote of secession or other act by which any State may undertake to put an end to the supremacy of the Constitution within its territory is inoperative and void against the Constitution, and when sustained by force it becomes a practical abdication by the State of all rights under the Constitution, while the treason which it involves still further works an instant forfeiture of all those functions and powers essential to the continued existence of the State as a body politic, so that from that time forward the territory falls under the exclusive jurisdiction of Congress as other territory, and the state being according to the language of the law, felo-de-se, ceases to exist.

2. Resolved, That any combination of men assuming to act in the place of such States, and attempting to insnare or coerce the inhabitants thereof into a confederation hostile to the Union is rebellious, treasonable, and destitute of all moral authority; and that such combination is a usurpation, incapable of any constitutional existence, and utterly lawless. so that everything dependent upon it is without constitutional or legal support.

3. Resolved, That the termination of a State under the Constitution necessarily causes the termination of those peculiar local institutions which, having no origin in the Constitution or in those natural rights which exist independent of the Constitution are upheld by the sole and exclusive authority of the State.

4. Resolved, That slavery being a peculiar local institution, derived from local laws, without any origin in the Constitution or in natural rights, is upheld by the sole and exclusive authority of the State, and must therefore cease to exist legally or constitutionally when the State on which it depends no longer exists; for the incident cannot survive the principal.

5. Resolved, That in the exercise of its exclusive jurisdiction over the territory once occupied by the States, it is the duty of Congress to see that the supremacy of the Constitution is maintained in its essential principles, so that everywhere in this extensive territory slavery shall cease to exist practically, as it has already ceased to exist constitutionally or legally. . .

9. Resolved, That the duty directly cast upon Congress by the extinction of the States is reinforced by the positive prohibition of the Constitution that "no State shall enter into any confederation," or "without the consent of Congress keep troops or ships-of-war in time of peace or enter into any agreement or compact with another State," or "grant letters of marque and reprisal," or "without the consent of Congress lay any duties on imports or exports." all of which have been done by these pretended governments, and also by the positive injunction of the Constitution, addressed to the nation, that "the United States shall guaranty to every State in this Union a republican form of government;" and that in pursuance of this duty cast upon Congress, and further enjoined by the Constitution, Congress will assume complete jurisdiction of such vacated territory where such unconstitutional and illegal things have been attempted, and will proceed to establish therein republican forms of government under the Constitution; and in the execution of this trust will provide carefully for the protection of all the inhabitants thereof, for the security of families, the organization of labor, the encouragement of industry, and the welfare of society, and will in every way discharge the duties of a just, merciful, and paternal government.

Five Conditions of Reconstruction

Resolved, That, in order to provide proper guaranties for security in the future, . . . it is the first duty of Congress to take care that no State declared to be in rebellion shall be allowed to resume its relations to the Union until after the satisfactory performance of five several conditions, which conditions precedent must be submitted to a popular vote, and be sanctioned by a majority of the people of each State respectively, as follows:

(1) The complete re-establishment of loyalty, as shown by an honest recognition of the unity of the Republic, and the duty of allegiance to it at all times, without mental reservation or equivocation of any kind.

(2) The complete suppression of all oligarchical pretensions, and the complete enfranchisement of all citizens, so that there shall be no denial of rights on account of color or race; but justice shall be impartial, and all shall be equal before the law.

(3) The rejection of the rebel debt, and at the same time the adoption, in just proportion, of the national debt and the national obligations to Union soldiers, with solemn pledges never to join in any measure, direct or indirect, for their repudiation, or in any way tending to impair the national credit.

(4) The organization of an educational system for the equal benefit of all without distinction of color or race.

(5) The choice of citizens for office, whether state or national, of constant and undoubted loyalty, whose conduct and conversation shall give assurance of peace and reconciliation.

Resolved, That in order to provide these essential safeguards, without which the national security and the national faith will be imperilled, States cannot be precipitated back to political power and independence; but they must wait until these conditions are in all respects fulfilled.

8. THE CONQUERED PROVINCE THEORY OF THADDEUS STEVENS

The Conquered Provinces

Congressional Globe, December 18, 1865, p. 72.

THE President assumes, what no one doubts, that the late rebel States have lost their constitutional relations to the Union, and are incapable of representation in Congress, except by permission of the Government. It matters but little, with this admission, whether you call them States out of the Union, and now conquered territories, or assert that because the Constitution forbids them to do what they did do, that they are therefore only dead as to all national and political action, and will remain so until the Government shall breathe into them the breath of life anew and permit them to occupy their former position. In other words, that they are not out of the Union, but are only dead carcasses lying within the Union. In either case, it is very plain that it requires the action of Congress to enable them to form a State government and send representatives to Congress. Nobody, I believe, pretends that with their old constitutions and frames of government they can be permitted to claim their old rights under the Constitution. They have torn their constitutional States into atoms, and built on their foundations fabrics of a totally different character. Dead men cannot raise themselves. Dead States cannot restore their existence "as it was." Whose especial duty is it to do it? In whom does the Constitution place the power? Not in the judicial branch of Government, for it only adjudicates and does not prescribe laws. Not in the Executive, for he only executes and cannot make laws. Not in the Commander-in-Chief of the armies, for he can only hold them under military rule until the sovereign legislative power of the conqueror shall give them law. Unless the law of nations is a dead letter, the late war between two acknowledged belligerents severed their original compacts and broke all the ties that bound them together. The future condition of the conquered power depends on the will of the conqueror. They must come in as new states or remain as conquered provinces. Congress . . . is the only power that can act in the matter.

Congress alone can do it. . . Congress must create States and declare when they are entitled to be represented. Then each House must judge whether the members presenting themselves from a recognized State possess the requisite qualifications of age, residence, and citizenship; and whether the election and returns are according to law. . .

It is obvious from all this that the first duty of Congress is to pass a law declaring the condition of these outside or defunct States, and providing proper civil governments for them. Since the conquest they have been governed by martial law. Military rule is necessarily despotic, and ought not to exist longer than is absolutely necessary. As there are no symptoms that the people of these provinces will be prepared to participate in constitutional government for some years, I know of no arrangement so proper for them as territorial governments. There they can learn the principles of freedom and eat the fruit of foul rebellion. Under such governments, while electing members to the territorial Legislatures, they will necessarily mingle with those to whom Congress shall extend the right of suffrage. In Territories Congress fixes the qualifications of electors; and I know of no better place nor better occasion for the conquered rebels and the conqueror to practice justice to all men, and accustom themselves to make and obey equal laws. . .

They ought never to be recognized as capable of acting in the Union, or of being counted as valid States, until the Constitution shall have been so amended as to make it what its framers intended; and so as to secure perpetual ascendancy to the party of the Union; and so as to render our republican Government firm and stable forever. The first of those amendments is to change the basis of representation among the States from Federal numbers to actual voters. . . With the basis unchanged the 83 Southern members, with the Democrats that will in the best times be elected from the North, will always give a majority in Congress and in the Electoral college. . . I need not depict the ruin that would follow. . .

But this is not all that we ought to do before inveterate rebels are invited to participate in our legislation. We have turned, or are about to turn, loose four million slaves without a hut to shelter them or a cent in their pockets. The infernal laws of slavery have prevented them from acquiring an education, understanding the common laws of contract, or of managing the ordinary business of life. This Congress is bound to provide for them until they can take care of themselves. If we do not furnish them with homesteads, and hedge them around with protective laws; if we leave them to the legislation of their late masters, we had better have left them in bondage. . . If we fail in this great duty now, when we have the power, we shall deserve and receive the execration of history and of all future ages.

The Advantages of Negro Suffrage

UNLESS the rebel States, before admission, should be made republican in spirit, and placed under the guardianship of loyal men, all our blood and treasure will have been spent in vain. I waive now the question of punishment which, if we are wise, will still be inflicted by moderate confiscations. . . Having these States . . . entirely within the power of Congress, it is our duty to take care that no injustice shall remain in their organic laws. Holding them "like clay in the hands of the potter," we must see that no vessel is made for destruction. Having now no governments, they must have enabling acts. The law of last session with regard to Territories settled the principles of such acts. Impartial suffrage, both in electing the delegates and ratifying their proceedings, is now the fixed rule. There is more reason why colored voters should be admitted in the rebel States than in the Territories. In the States they form the great mass of the loyal men. Possibly with their aid loyal governments may be established in most of those States. Without it all are sure to be ruled by traitors; and loyal men, black and white, will be oppressed, exiled, or murdered. There are several good reasons for the passage of this bill. In the first place, it is just. I am now confining my argument to negro suffrage in the rebel States. Have not loyal blacks quite as good a right to choose rulers and make laws as rebel whites? In the second place, it is a necessity in order to protect the loyal white men in the seceded States. The white Union men are in a great minority in each of those States. With them the blacks would act in a body; and it is believed that in each of said States, except one, the two united would form a majority, control the States, and protect themselves. Now they are the victims of daily murder. They must suffer constant persecution or be exiled. . . .

Another good reason is, it would insure the ascendancy of the Union party. . . . I believe . . . that on the continued ascendancy of that party depends the safety of this great nation. If impartial suffrage is excluded in the rebel States, then every one of them is sure to send a solid rebel representative delegation to Congress, and cast a solid rebel electoral vote. They, with their kindred Copperheads of the North, would always elect the President and control Congress. While slavery sat upon her defiant throne, and insulted and intimidated the trembling North, the South frequently divided on questions of policy between Whigs and Democrats, and gave victory alternately to the sections. Now, you must divide them between loyalists, without regard to color, and disloyalists, or you will be the perpetual vassals of the free-trade, irritated, revengeful South. . . . I am for negro suffrage in every rebel State. If it be just, it should not be denied; if it be necessary, it should be adopted; if it be a punishment to traitors, they deserve it.

Reasons for Confiscations

Congressional Globe, March 10, 1866, p. 1309.

[1866]

I HAVE never desired bloody punishments to any great extent. . . . But there are punishments quite as appalling, and longer remembered, than death. They are more advisable, because they would reach a greater number. Strip a proud nobility of their bloated estates; reduce them to a level with plain republicans; send them forth to labor, and teach their children to enter the workshops or handle the plow, and you will thus humble the proud traitors. Teach his posterity to respect labor and eschew treason. Conspirators are bred among the rich and the vain, the ambitious aristocrats. I trust yet to see our confiscation laws fully executed.

A Plan for Confiscation

Congressional Globe, March 19, 1867, p. 203. A bill introduced by Stevens. [1867]

WHEREAS it is due to justice, as an example to future times, that some proper punishment should be inflicted on the people who constituted the "confederate States of America," both because they, declaring an unjust war against the United States for the purpose of destroying republican liberty and permanently establishing slavery, as well as for the cruel and barbarous manner in which they conducted said war, in violation of all the laws of civilized warfare, and also to compel them to make some compensation for the damages and expenditures caused by said war: Therefore,

Be it enacted . . . That all the public lands belonging to the ten States that formed the government of the so-called "confederate States of America" shall be forfeited by said States and become forthwith vested in the United States.

Sec. 2. . . The President shall forthwith proceed to cause the seizure of such of the property belonging to the belligerent enemy as is deemed forfeited by the act of July 17, A. D. 1862, and hold and appropriate the same as enemy's property, and to proceed to condemnation with that already seized.

Sec. 3. . . In lieu of the proceeding to condemn the property thus seized as enemy's property, as is provided by the act of July 17, A. D. 1862, two commissions or more, as by him may be deemed necessary, shall be appointed by the President for each of the said "confederate States," to consist of three persons each, one of whom shall be an officer of the late or present Army, and two shall be civilians, neither of whom shall be citizens of the State for which he shall be appointed; the said commissions shall proceed to adjudicate and condemn the property aforesaid, under such forms and proceedings as shall be prescribed by the Attorney General of the United States, whereupon the title to said property shall become vested in the United States.

Sec. 4. . . Out of the lands thus seized and confiscated the slaves who have been liberated by the operations of the war and the amendment to the Constitution or otherwise, who resided in said "confederate States" on the 4th day of March, A. D. 1861, or since, shall have distributed to them as follows, namely: to each male person who is the head of a family, forty acres; to each adult male, whether the head of a family or not, forty acres; to each widow who is the head of a family, forty acres — to be held by them in fee simple, but to be inalienable for the next ten years after they become seized thereof. For the purpose of distributing and allotting said land the Secretary of War shall appoint in each State as many commissions as he may deem necessary, to consist of three members each, two of whom at least shall not be citizens of the State for which he is appointed. . . At the end of ten years the absolute title to said homesteads shall be conveyed to said owners or to the heirs of such as are then dead.

Sec. 5. . . Out of the balance of the property thus seized and confiscated there shall be raised, in the manner hereinafter provided, a sum equal to fifty dollars, for each homestead, to be applied by the trustees hereinafter mentioned toward the erection of buildings on the said homesteads for the use of said slaves; and the further sum of $500,000,000, which shall be appropriated as follows, to-wit: $200,000,000 shall be invested in United States six per cent. securities; and the interest thereof shall be semi-annually added to the pensions allowed by law to the pensioners who have become so by reason of the late war; $300,000,000, or so much thereof as may be needed, shall be appropriated to pay damages done to loyal citizens by the civil or military operations of the government lately called the "confederate States of America."

Sec. 6. . . In order that just discrimination may be made, the property of no one shall be seized whose whole estate on the 4th day of March, A. D. 1865, was not worth more than $5,000, to be valued by the said commission, unless he shall have voluntarily become an officer or employee in the military or civil service of "the Confederate States of America," or in the civil or military service of some one of said States, and in enforcing all confiscations the sum or value of $5,000 in real or personal property shall be left or assigned to the delinquent. . .

Sec. 8. . . If the owners of said seized and forfeited estates shall, within ninety days after the first of said publications, pay into the Treasury of the United States the sum assessed on their estates respectively, all of their estates and lands not actually appropriated to the liberated slaves shall be released and restored to their owners.

Sec. 9. . . All the land, estates, and property, of whatever kind, which shall not be redeemed as aforesaid within ninety days, shall be sold and converted into money, in such time and manner as may be deemed by the said commissioners the most advantageous to the United States: Provided, That no arable land shall be sold in tracts larger than 500 acres.

9. VARIOUS PLANS AND SUGGESTIONS

The Sherman-Johnston Convention

Memoirs of Gen. W. T. Sherman, by Himself, vol. ii, p. 356. This agreement, drawn up by General Sherman, was repudiated by the Washington administration. [April 18, 1865]

Memorandum or Basis of Agreement made this 18th day of April, A. D. 1865, near Durham's Station, in the State of North Carolina by and between General Joseph E. Johnston, commanding the Confederate Army, and Major General W. T. Sherman, commanding the army of the United States in North Carolina, both present:

. . . 2. The Confederate armies now in existence to be disbanded and conducted to the several State capitals, there to deposit their arms and public property in the State arsenal; and each officer and man to execute and file an agreement to cease from acts of war, and to abide the action of the State and Federal authority. The number of arms and munitions of war to be reported to the Chief of Ordnance at Washington City, subject to the future action of the Congress of the United States, and, in the meantime, to be used solely to maintain peace and order within the borders of the States respectively.

3. The recognition by the Executive of the United States of the several State Governments, on their officers and Legislatures taking the oath prescribed by the Constitution of the United States, and, where conflicting State Governments have resulted from the war, the legitimacy of all shall be submitted to the Supreme Court of the United States.

4. The reestablishment of all Federal Courts in the several States, with powers as defined by the Constitution of the United States and of the States respectively.

5. The people and inhabitants of all the States to be guaranteed, so far as the Executive can, their political rights and franchises, as well as their rights of person and property, as defined by the Constitution of the United States and of the States respectively.

6. The Executive authority of the Government of the United States not to disturb any of the people by reason of the late war so long as they live in peace and quiet, abstain from acts of armed hostility, and obey the laws in existence at the place of their residence.

7. In general terms the war to cease, a general amnesty, so far as the Executive of the United States can command, on condition of the disbandment of the Confederate armies, the distribution of the arms and the resumption of peaceful pursuits by the officers and men hitherto composing said armies.

Opinions of C. P. Huntington

Johnson MSS. Letter of C. P. Huntington to Hugh McCulloch, Secretary of the Treasury.
[October 19, 1865]

THE organized, not to say impertinent efforts, that have been made in this locality, on the part of some ambitious, and many well-intentioned Republicans, to dictate a policy to the President, to forestall the wisdom of his Cabinet and of Congress, and to lead public opinion, have had the effect, if nothing more, of silencing or muzzling the Republican press as to the Administration, and of creating suspicions, distrust and fear, when and where a warm, generous and outspoken support might not only have been expected, but was demanded by every loyal consideration. . . .

The fallacy that the Rebel states were out of the Union and quasi-territorial, has not obtained much foothold here, encountering, as it does, so many practical facts, and requiring, as it does, a recognition of the power and right of secession for its own basis, political power involving and carrying with it political right. But another position more plausible, "that the rebellious States are held in the grasp of war," and should be so held, until the right of suffrage is secured to freedmen, meets with more favor. They who are pressing this demand seem to forget how narrow and limited is their own field of observation, and that there may be men who from a higher point of view, and with more extended and practical knowledge of the political relations of men and things through the whole country, are more competent, and equally loyal and trusty, to judge what kind and how much of "security for the future" is necessary, who forget that some twenty-six states out of New England, and one within, now exclude blacks from the elective franchise. . . . Indeed, they seem to forget how far East the West now extends, and that it may have something to say about Massachusetts intermeddling with their reserved rights.

How much more extraordinary is it, that this extreme or impracticable class should have expected or demanded of the President, that . . . he should originate another revolution, and usurp a power never delegated by the States, but reserved to themselves in express terms — the right of each state to establish the elective franchise for itself. As if the President could exercise a power . . . which Congress itself could not exercise without an amendment of the Constitution. If he had undertaken so to do, I see not how members of Congress elected under such call, could have been anything more than intruders, or why he should attempt to quell a political revolution in some of the States by originating a great social revolution in many more. Neither can it easily be perceived, how the necessities of war and the military power in destroying slavery, could also bestow the right of suffrage, which no military or Executive proclamation ever claimed to do, or establish new constitutions, or invest the President with new and original civil power, creating political relations where they had never before existed, and destroying them where expressly reserved.

Governor Andrew's Plan

Gov. John A. Andrew's Valedictory Address to the Massachusetts Legislature. [January 4, 1866]

I AM confident we cannot re-organize political society with any proper security: 1. Unless we let in people to a co-operation, and not merely an arbitrarily selected portion of them. 2. Unless we give those who are, by their intelligence and character, the natural leaders of the people, and who surely will lead them by and by, an opportunity to lead them now.

I am aware that it has been a favorite dogma in many quarters, "No Rebel Voters." But — it is impossible in certain States to have any voting by white men, if only "loyal men" . . . are permitted to vote. . .

The Southern People . . . fought, toiled, endured, and persevered, with a courage, a unanimity and a persistency, not outdone by any people in any Revolution. There was never an acre of territory abandoned to the Union while it could be held by arms. There was never a Rebel regiment surrendered to the Union arms until resistance was overcome by force. . . The people of the South, men and women, soldiers and civilians, volunteers and conscripts, in the army and at home, followed the fortunes of the Rebellion and obeyed its leaders, so long as it had any fortunes or any leaders. Their young men marched up to cannon's mouth, a thousand times, where they were mowed down like grain by the reapers when the harvest is ripe. . . And since the President finds himself obliged to let in the great mass of the disloyal, . . . to a participation in the business of reorganizing the Rebel States, I am obliged also to confess that I think to make one rule for the richer and higher rebels, and another rule for the poorer and more lowly rebels is impolitic and unphilosophical. I find evidence in the granting of pardons, that such also is the opinion of the President.

When the day arrives, . . . when an amnesty, substantially universal, shall be proclaimed, the leading minds of the South, who by temporary policy and artificial rules had been, for the while, disfranchised, will resume their influence and their sway. The capacity of leadership is a gift, not a device. They whose courage, talents and will entitle them to lead, will lead. . . We ought to demand, and to secure, the co-operation of the strongest and ablest minds and the natural leaders of opinion in the South. If we cannot gain their support of the just measures needful for the work of safe re-organization, re-organization will be delusive and full of danger. . .

They are the most hopeful subjects to deal with, in the very nature of the case. They have the brain and the experience and the education to enable them to understand . . . the present situation. They have the courage, as well as the skill, to lead the people in the direction their judgments point, in spite of their own and the popular prejudice. . . Is it consistent with reason and our knowledge of human nature, to believe the masses of Southern men able to face about, to turn their backs on those they have trusted and followed, and to adopt the lead of those who have no magnetic hold on their hearts or minds? . . .

It would be idle to re-organize those States by the colored vote. If the popular vote of the white race is not to be had in favor of the guarantees justly required, then I am in favor of holding on — just where we now are. I am not in favor of a surrender of the present rights of the Union to a struggle between a white minority aided by the freedmen on the one hand, against the majority of the white race on the other. I would not consent, having rescued those States by arms from secession and rebellion, to turn them over to anarchy and chaos. . . .

I am satisfied that the mass of thinking men at the South accept the present condition of things in good faith; and I am also satisfied that with the support of a firm policy from the President and Congress, in aid of the efforts of their good faith, and with the help of a conciliatory and generous disposition on the part of the North . . . the measures needed for permanent and universal welfare can surely be obtained. There ought now to be a vigorous prosecution of the Peace — just as vigorous as our recent prosecution of the War. We ought to extend our hands with cordial good-will to meet the proffered hands of the South; demanding no attitude of humiliation from any; inflicting no acts of humiliation upon any; respecting the feelings of the conquered.

Supreme Court Theory

[1869]

DID Texas [during the war], cease to be a State? Or, if not, did the State cease to be a member of the Union? . . . The Union of the States never was a purely artificial and arbitrary relation. . . Not only, therefore, can there be no loss of separate and independent autonomy to the States through their union under the Constitution, but it may be not unreasonably said that the preservation of the States, and the maintenance of their governments, are as much within the design and care of the Constitution as the preservation of the Union and the maintenance of the National government. The Constitution, in all its provisions, looks to an indestructible Union, composed of indestructible States. . .

The ordinance of secession, adopted by the convention and ratified by a majority of the citizens of Texas, and all the acts of her legislature intended to give effect to that ordinance, were absolutely null. They were utterly without operation in law. The obligations of the State, as a member of the Union, and of every citizen of the State, as a citizen of the United States, remained perfect and unimpaired. It certainly follows that the State did not cease to be a State, nor her citizens to be citizens of the Union. If this were otherwise, the State must have become foreign, and her citizens foreigners. The war must have ceased to be a war for the suppression of rebellion, and must have become a war for conquest and subjugation.

Our conclusion therefore is, that Texas continued to be a State, and a State of the Union. . . During this condition of civil war, the rights of the State as a member, and her people as citizens of the Union, were suspended. . . There being no government in Texas in constitutional relations with the Union, it became the duty of the United States to provide for the restoration of such a government. . . But, the power to carry into effect the clause of guaranty is primarily a legislative power, and resides in Congress. . . The action of the President must, therefore, be considered as provisional, and, in that light, it seems to have been regarded by Congress.

III

INTRODUCTION

PRESIDENT LINCOLN, holding that it was the duty of the executive to initiate Reconstruction, established during the war provisional governments in three of the states — Tennessee, Louisiana, and Arkansas. In Virginia he recognized the so-called “reorganized” government. A new state was set up in West Virginia. Congress opposed the policy of Lincoln but had not definitely rejected it when the war ended. After Lincoln’s death, Congress not being in session, President Johnson had a clear field for a trial of his plan of restoring the Union. For a month he made no move except to reject the Sherman-Johnston convention. Meanwhile in the lower South the state officers began a movement looking toward reorganization for the purpose of asking for readmission to the Union. About May 20, 1865, Johnson ordered that this movement be crushed by the arrest of all who should take part in it. On May 29 with the publication of the Amnesty Proclamation and the appointment of a provisional governor for North Carolina, he began his work of reorganizing the southern communities. For each of the seceded states, except Louisiana, Tennessee, Arkansas and Virginia, he appointed a governor who organized a provisional administration and called a constitutional convention, which was required by the President: (1) to abolish slavery, declare the ordinance of secession null and void, and repudiate all debts incurred in aid of the war; (2) to provide for a new state government based on the constitution and laws of 1861, without slavery. Next in each state were held elections of local and state officials, legislators and congressmen. Presidential governors and their administrations now gave way to those elected by the people. The legislatures, under pressure from Washington, ratified the Thirteenth Amendment, and elected United States senators. The process of restoration was now complete if Congress would admit the Southern representatives.

But Congress refused to do this, and the state governments in the South continued as provisional only and subject to constant interference by the President. The breach between the President and Congress rapidly widened. The Civil Rights and Freedmen's Bureau acts were passed over the veto. Finally Congress proposed the Fourteenth Amendment as a sort of compromise: if they should ratify it the Southern States would be recognized but the leading whites would be disfranchised by it. The President opposed it. Tennessee alone ratified it and was readmitted. The other Southern States after rejecting the Amendment prepared a modified form of it which they were willing to accept, but nothing came of this attempt. The year of 1866 was a year of campaigning, North and South, on the question of Reconstruction. Individuals and parties declared for Congress or for the Presidential policy. The so-called Radical party was organized in the South to advocate negro suffrage and to secure its fruits. The President himself took part in the campaign, but his policy was condemned at the polls in the North. The Presidential state governments continued in the South more or less under the control of the army and the Freedmen's Bureau until Congress passed the Reconstruction acts in March, 1867.

I. THE PRESIDENT'S PLAN IN OPERATION

An Early Attempt at Restoration

Annual Cyclopaedia. 1865, p. 578. Proclamation of Gov. Charles Clarke of Mississippi. There were similar movements in the states from South Carolina to Texas, favored by the union army officers, but about May 20 the President ordered all these governments dispersed. [May 6, 1865]

To the people of Mississippi:

Gen. Taylor informs me that all Confederate armies east of the Mississippi River are surrendered. . . Federal commanders will only send such troops as may be necessary to guard public property. . .

Arrangements will be made to issue supplies to the destitute. I have called the Legislature to convene on Thursday, the 18th instant. They will, doubtless, order a convention. The officers of the State Government will immediately return with the archives to Jackson.

County officers will be vigilant in the preservation of order and the protection of property. Sheriffs have power to call out posse comitatus, and the militia will keep arms and other orders for this purpose, as in times of peace.

The State laws must be enforced as they now are until repealed. If the public property is protected and peace preserved, the necessity of Federal troops in your counties will be avoided. You are therefore urged to continue to arrest all marauders and plunderers. The collection of taxes should be suspended, as the laws will doubtless be changed.

Masters are responsible, as heretofore, for the protection and conduct of their slaves, and they should be kept at home as heretofore. Let all citizens fearlessly adhere to the fortunes of the State. Assist the returning soldiers to obtain civil employment, condemn twelfth-hour vaporers, and meet facts with fortitude and common sense.

Southern State Governments not Recognized

War Department Archives. General Order No. 52, Department of Mississippi, May 20, 1865, publishing a telegram from Secretary Stanton. [1865]

BY direction of the President, you will not recognize any officer of the Confederate or State Government, within the limits of your command, as authorized to exercise in any manner whatever the function of their late offices. You will prevent, if necessary, any attempt of any of the legislatures of the States in insurrection to assemble for legislative purposes, and will imprison any members or other persons who may attempt to exercise his functions in opposition to your orders.

Johnson's Proclamation of Amnesty

Richardson, Messages and Papers. vol. vi, p. 310. [May 29, 1865]

WHEREAS the President of the United States, on the 8th day of December, A. D., 1863, and on the 26th day of March, 1864, did, with the object to suppress the existing rebellion, to induce all persons to return to their loyalty, and to restore the authority of the United States, issue proclamations offering amnesty and pardon to certain persons who had directly, or by implication, participated in the said rebellion; and

Whereas many persons who had so engaged in said rebellion have, since the issuance of said proclamations, failed or neglected to take the benefits offered thereby; and

Whereas many persons who have been justly deprived of all claim to amnesty and pardon thereunder by reason of their participation, directly or by implication, in said rebellion, and continued hostility to the Government of the United States since the date of said proclamations, now desire to apply for and obtain amnesty and pardon.

To the end, therefore, that the authority of the Government of the United States may be restored, and that peace, order, and freedom may be established, I, Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, do proclaim and declare that I hereby grant to all persons who have, directly or indirectly, participated in the existing rebellion, except as hereinafter excepted, amnesty and pardon, with restoration of all rights of property, except as to slaves and except in cases where legal proceedings, under the laws of the United States providing for the confiscation of property of persons engaged in rebellion, have been instituted; but upon the condition, nevertheless, that every such person shall take and subscribe the following oath (or affirmation), and thence forward keep and maintain said oath inviolate; and which oath shall be registered for permanent preservation, and shall be of the tenor and effect following, to wit:

"I, _____, do solemnly swear (or affirm), in presence of Almighty God, that I will henceforth faithfully support, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States, and the Union of the States thereunder; and that I will, in like manner, abide by and faithfully support all laws and proclamations which have been made during the existing rebellion, with reference to the emancipation of slaves. So help me God."

The following classes of persons are excepted from the benefits of this proclamation:

First. All who are or shall have been pretended civil or diplomatic officers or otherwise domestic or foreign agents of the pretended Confederate government.

Second. All who left judicial stations under the United States to aid the rebellion.

Third. All who shall have been military or naval officers of said pretended Confederate government above the rank of colonel in the army or lieutenant in the navy.

Fourth. All who left seats in the Congress of the United States to aid the rebellion.

Fifth. All who resigned or tendered resignations of their commissions in the army or navy of the United States to evade duty in resisting the rebellion.

Sixth. All who have engaged in any way in treating otherwise than lawfully as prisoners of war persons found in the United States service as officers, soldiers, seamen, or in other capacities.

Seventh. All persons who have been or are absentees from the United States for the purpose of aiding in the rebellion.

Eighth. All military and naval officers in the rebel service who were educated by the Government in the Military Academy at West Point or the United States Naval Academy.

Ninth. All persons who held the pretended offices of governors of States in insurrection against the United States.

Tenth. All persons who left their homes within the jurisdiction and protection of the United States and passed beyond the Federal military lines into the pretended Confederate States for the purpose of aiding the rebellion.

Eleventh. All persons who have been engaged in the destruction of the commerce of the United States upon the high seas and all persons who have made raids into the United States from Canada or been engaged in destroying the commerce of the United States upon the lakes and rivers that separate the British Provinces from the United States.

Twelfth. All persons who, at the time when they seek to obtain the benefits hereof by taking the oath herein prescribed, are in military, naval, or civil confinement or custody, or under bonds of the civil, military, or naval authorities or agents of the United States as prisoners of war, or persons detained for offenses of any kind, either before or after conviction.

Thirteenth. All persons who have voluntarily participated in said rebellion, and the estimated value of whose taxable property is over $20,000.

Fourteenth. All persons who have taken the oath of amnesty prescribed in the President's proclamation of December 8, A. D. 1863, or an oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States since the date of said proclamation, and who have not thenceforward kept and maintained the same inviolate.

Provided, That special application may be made to the President for pardon by any person belonging to the excepted classes, and such clemency will be liberally extended as may be consistent with the facts of the case and the peace and dignity of the United States. . .

Appointment of a Provisional Governor

Richardson, Messages and Papers, vol. vi, p. 312. Proclamation appointing W. W. Holden, provisional governor of North Carolina. Similar proclamations were issued for Mississippi on June 13, Georgia and Texas on June 17, Alabama on June 21, South Carolina on June 30, and for Florida on July 13. Under the Lincoln plan, governments had been set up in Louisiana, Arkansas, Tennessee and Virginia.
[May 29, 1865]

WHEREAS the fourth section of the fourth article of the Constitution of the United States declares that the United States shall guarantee to every State in the Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion and domestic violence; and

Whereas the President of the United States is by the Constitution made Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, as well as chief civil executive officer of the United States, and is bound by solemn oath faithfully to execute the office of President of the United States and to take care that the laws be faithfully executed; and

Whereas the rebellion which has been waged by a portion of the people of the United States against the properly constituted authorities of the Government thereof in the most violent and revolting form, but whose organized and armed forces have now been almost entirely overcome, has in its revolutionary progress deprived the people of the State of North Carolina of all civil government; and

Whereas it becomes necessary and proper to carry out and enforce the obligations of the United States to the people of North Carolina, in securing them in the enjoyment of a republican form of government:

Now, therefore, in obedience to the high and solemn duties imposed upon me by the Constitution of the United States and for the purpose of enabling the loyal people of said State to organize a State government whereby justice may be established, domestic tranquility insured, and loyal citizens protected in all their rights of life, liberty, and property, I, Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, and Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, do hereby appoint William W. Holden Provisional Governor of the State of North Carolina, whose duty it shall be, at the earliest practicable period, to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for convening a convention, composed of delegates to be chosen by that portion of the people of said State who are loyal to the United States, and no others, for the purpose of altering or amending the constitution thereof, and with authority to exercise, within the limits of said State, all the powers necessary and proper to enable such loyal people of the State of North Carolina to restore said State to its constitutional relations to the Federal Government and to present such a republican form of State government as will entitle the State to the guarantee of the United States therefor and its people to the protection by the United States against invasion, insurrection and domestic violence: Provided, that in any election that may be hereafter held for choosing delegates to any State convention as aforesaid no person shall be qualified as an elector, or shall be eligible as a member of such convention unless he shall have previously taken the oath of amnesty as set forth in the President's proclamation of May 29, A. D. 1865, and is a voter qualified as prescribed by the Constitution and laws of the State of North Carolina, in force immediately before the 20th day of May, 1861, the date of the so-called ordinance of secession; and the said convention when convened, or the Legislature that may be thereafter assembled, will prescribe the qualification of electors, and the eligibility of persons to hold office under the Constitution and laws of the State — a power the people of the several States composing the Federal Union have rightfully exercised from the origin of the Government to the present time.

And I do hereby direct —

First. That the military commander of the department and all officers and persons in the military and naval service aid and assist the said Provisional Governor in carrying into effect this proclamation; and they are enjoined to abstain from in any way hindering, impeding, or discouraging the loyal people from the organization of a State Government as herein authorized.

Second. That the Secretary of State proceed to put in force all laws of the United States the administration whereof belongs to the State Department applicable to the geographical limits aforesaid.

Third. That the Secretary of the Treasury proceed to nominate for appointment assessors of taxes and collectors of customs and internal revenue and such other officers of the Treasury Department as are authorized by law and put in execution the revenue laws of the United States within the geographical limits aforesaid. In making appointments, the preference shall be given to qualified loyal persons residing within the district where their respective duties are to be performed; but if suitable residents of the districts shall not be found then persons residing in other States or districts shall be appointed.

Fourth. That the Postmaster General proceed to establish post offices and post routes and put into execution the postal laws of the United States within the said State, giving to loyal residents the preference of appointment. . .

Fifth. That the district judge for the judicial district in which North Carolina is included proceed to hold courts within said State in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress. The Attorney General will instruct the proper officers to libel and bring to judgment, confiscation and sale property subject to confiscation and enforce the administration of justice within said State in all matters within the cognizance and jurisdiction of the Federal courts.

Sixth. That the Secretary of the Navy take possession of all public property belonging to the Navy Department within said geographical limits and put in operation all acts of Congress in relation to naval affairs having application to the said State.

Seventh. That the Secretary of the Interior put in force the laws relating to the Interior Department, applicable to the geographical limits aforesaid. . .

Forming a "Johnson" State Government

Proclamation of Lewis E. Parsons, provisional governor of Alabama. Before the meeting of the constitutional convention each governor appointed by President Johnson formed a provisional administration in the manner described in this proclamation. It will be observed that the Confederate state administration is made use of.

[July 20, 1865]

Now for the purpose of carrying into execution the commands of the President, and to enable the loyal people of Alabama to secure to themselves the benefits of civil government, I do hereby declare and ordain:

1. That the Justices of the Peace and Constables in each county of this State, the members of the Commissioners Court . . . the County Treasurer, the Tax Collector and Assessor, the Coroner and the several municipal officers of each incorporated city or town in the State, who were respectively in office and ready to discharge the duties thereof, on the 22nd of May, 1865,¹ are hereby appointed to fill those offices during the continuance of this provisional government. . . The power is hereby reserved to remove any person for disloyalty or for improper conduct in office, or neglect of its duties. . .

The Judges of Probate and Sheriffs, who were in office on the 22nd of May, 1865, will take the oath as herein required of other officers, and continue to discharge the duties of their respective offices until others are appointed.

2. Each of these persons just appointed to office must take the oath of Amnesty, as prescribed by the President's proclamation of the 29th day of May, 1865, and immediately transmit the same to this office. . . Each of these officers must also give bond and security payable to the State of Alabama, as required by the laws of Alabama on the 11th day of January, 1861.² If any person acts in the discharge of the duties of any of the aforesaid offices without having complied with the foregoing regulations on his part he will be punished. This oath of amnesty and of office may be taken before any commissioned officer in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States; and the Judge of Probate in each county in this State . . . may also administer it. . . But no one can hold

1. The date of the discontinuance of the Confederate state government.

2. The date of the ordinance of secession.

any of these offices who is exempted by the proclamation of the President from the benefit of amnesty, unless he has been specially pardoned.

3. The appointment of Judge of Probate and Sheriff in each county will be made specially, as soon as suitable persons are properly recommended, and when appointed they will take the oath of amnesty prescribed in the foregoing section, and give bond and security as required by the law of Alabama on the 11th of January, 1861. Any vacancies in any of the county offices will be promptly filled when it is made known and a proper person recommended. . .

5. An election for delegates to a convention of the loyal citizens of Alabama, will be held in each county in the State on Monday, the 31st day of August next, in the manner provided by the laws of Alabama on the 11th day of January, 1861; but no person can vote in said election, or be a candidate for said election, who is not a legal voter as the law was on that day; and if he is excepted from the benefit of amnesty under the President's Proclamation . . he must have obtained a pardon.

6. Every person must vote in the county of his residence, and before he is allowed to do so, must take and subscribe the oath of amnesty prescribed in the President's Proclamation of the 29th of May, 1865, before some one of the officers hereinafter appointed for that purpose in the county where he offers to vote. . .

7. There will be elected in each county of the State, on said day, as many delegates to said Convention as said county was entitled to representatives in the House of Representatives on the 11th day of January, 1861; and the delegates so elected will receive a certificate of election from the sheriff of the county, and will assemble in Convention at the Capitol in Montgomery, on the 10th day of September 1865. . .

8. From and after this day, the civil and criminal laws of Alabama, as they stood on the 11th day of January, 1861, except that portion which relates to slaves, are hereby declared to be in full force and operation; and all proceedings for the punishment of offences against them, will be turned over to the proper civil officers, together with the custody of the person charged, and the civil authorities will proceed in all cases according to law. Suits in civil cases now pending, whether an original measure, or final process, before any officer acting under military authority, will also be turned over to the proper civil officer, and will be governed in all things by the laws of the State aforesaid.

9. All unlawful means to punish offenders are hereby strictly prohibited. No "vigilance committee" or other organization, for the punishment of supposed offenders, not authorized by the laws of the State, will be permitted, and if any such are attempted, the person or persons so offending, will be promptly arrested and punished. . . . If offenders become too strong, the military power of the United States will aid us. Henceforth that power will act in aid of, and in subordination to the civil authority of the State.

10. The oath which is required to be taken by those who desire to vote for delegates to the Convention, may be administered by the Judge of Probate of the county where the voter lives, or by any Justice of the Peace in said county and by officers specially thereunto appointed. . . . One copy of said oath will be given to the voter and another will be kept by the officer before whom it is taken which must be filed with the Judge of Probate, and endorsed by the Judge of Probate, with affiant's name . . . and preserved by him as a part of the records of his office. The Judge of Probate must make out a certified list of names numbered to correspond with the affidavit, and transmit it to this office by some one of the delegates to the Convention. . . .

11. There are no slaves now in Alabama. The slave code is a dead letter. . . .

13. . . . The Sheriffs of the several counties are hereby required to keep in readiness a sufficient force of deputies or assistants to enable them to execute all legal process and arrest all offenders promptly, and they will be held strictly accountable for any neglect of duty in this respect.

President Johnson on Negro Suffrage

[August 15, 1865]

I HOPE that without delay your convention will amend your State constitution, abolishing slavery and denying to all future Legislatures the power to legislate that there is property in man; also that they will adopt the amendment to the Constitution of the United States abolishing slavery. If you could extend the elective franchise to all persons of color who can read the Constitution of the United States in English and write their names, and to all persons of color who own real estate valued at not less than two hundred and fifty dollars and pay taxes thereon, you would completely disarm the adversary and set an example the other States will follow. This you can do with perfect safety, and you would thus place Southern States in reference to free persons of color upon the same basis with the free States. . . And as a consequence the radicals, who are wild upon negro franchise, will be completely foiled in their attempts to keep the Southern States from renewing their relations to the Union by not accepting their Senators and Representatives.

A Debate on the Abolition of Slavery

Annual Cyclopaedia, 1865, p. 14. In the Alabama convention. Coleman of Choctaw County was also in the convention of 1901 and chairman of the committee that framed the restricted suffrage clause.

[September, 1865]

MR. COLEMAN, of Choctaw County, contended that on our action depended the right of the property of the people. The Proclamation of the President and the act of Congress had destroyed slavery, but to make it complete required our ratification, and, before doing so, the validity and constitutionality of the proclamation and act of Congress should be tested before the Supreme Court of the United States. He recognized the right of the United States to pass laws for the punishment of crime, but as a State could not commit treason . . . and they could not be deprived of their property except on trial and conviction, those who had not been guilty of treason, could not be deprived of their property, although in slaves. Congress had no right to seize the property of an offender, after death, when it should revert to his heirs. . . . To admit the right of the Federal head by proclamation to nullify the Constitution of a State, was to concede the loss of the republic and the sovereignty of the States. The present course proposed by the majority report was one of expediency, and he was not prepared to sacrifice rights, honor, and property to it, although there was a great anxiety to get members elected to Congress. He denied that the President's Proclamation demanded of the State the abolition of slavery as a test of loyalty . . . that a State could not forfeit its rights, but citizens might. This was the loyal State of Alabama, and must be so regarded, yet were it not through force no member would vote to abolish slavery. We had no guarantee that the sacrifice would be accepted or that our members of Congress would be admitted; nothing would satisfy the Radicals of the North. He contended that on this great principle of State rights the North was as deeply interested as the South, and that the precedent of yielding as proposed by the majority report was too dangerous. We should accept the freeing of the slaves by the act of the Federal Executive and the bayonet, and it was not the free and voluntary act of the people of Alabama. He believed that when the country returned to its reason, those who had lost their property and who had not participated in the rebellion, would be compensated, but the ordinance proposed an estoppel on all reclamations.

Judge Foster of Calhoun County, replied as follows: The war had settled two questions forever, one that of secession, the other of slavery. They had been settled by a power whose decision was binding and final, and from which there was no appeal — the power of the sword. Disputes between individuals could be settled by events, but they have no power to adjust differences between States and nations. They must be adjusted by compromise and negotiation or submitted to the arbitrament of the sword. The decisions of the Supreme Court were not respected or obeyed even by political parties.

. . The substitute offered by Mr. White proposed to await the action of the Supreme Court. It was immaterial what that action was, so far as it secured us any practical benefit. . .

The first ordinance reported by the committee asserted a fact, apparent to every one, that the institution of slavery had been destroyed, not deciding when or how, whether constitutionally, or unconstitutionally. . . First, by the act of Congress and the President's Proclamation; second, by the military power of the Government of the United States . . the establishment of the Freedmen's Bureau, and the practical severing of the tie between master and slave. The ordinance also asserted the proposition that we would not revive slavery. . . The Government of the United States in every department was unalterably determined that slavery should no longer exist. The edict had gone forth, and we were powerless to resist it. We were a subjugated people, and our conquerors could dictate their own terms. . .

We could not reduce the negroes to slavery if the United States would withdraw their forces and stand aloof. We were exhausted, and the attempt would lead to a reënactment of the bloody scenes of St. Domingo. . .

The country needed repose. The people had made up their minds that slavery was gone, and were accommodating themselves to the new order of things. It was wrong to awaken delusive hopes that could never be satisfied. Our wisest course was in good faith to accept the situation and restore our relations with the Federal Union — reorganize our State Government, that law and order might again prevail in the land.

Abolition in North Carolina

Senate Ex. Doc. no. 26. 39 Cong., 1 Sess., p. 28. Each Southern state in its constitutional convention formally abolished slavery before the Thirteenth Amendment was ratified. [October 9, 1865]

Be it declared and ordained by the delegates of the people of the State of North Carolina in convention assembled, and it is hereby declared and ordained, That slavery and involuntary servitude, otherwise than for crimes, whereof the parties shall have been duly convicted, shall be and is hereby forever prohibited within the State.

The Ordinance of Secession Null and Void

Senate Ex. Doc. no. 26, 39 Cong., 1 Sess., p. 28. Each seceding state in its convention declared the ordinance by which it seceded to be null and void. Only North Carolina declared that it had always been void. [October 7, 1865]

Be it declared and ordained by the delegates of the good people of North Carolina . . . That the ordinance of the convention of the State of Carolina, ratified on the twenty-first day of November, seventeen hundred and eighty-nine, which adopted and ratified the Constitution of the United States, and also all acts and parts of acts of the general assembly ratifying and adopting amendments to the said Constitution, are now and at all times since the adoption and ratification thereof have been in full force and effect, notwithstanding the supposed ordinance of the twentieth day of May, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, declaring that the same be repealed, rescinded and abrogated; and the said supposed ordinance is now and at all times hath been null and void.

Repudiation of the Confederate Debt

McPherson, History of Reconstruction, p. 19. Johnson to W. W. Holden, provisional governor of North Carolina. [October 18, 1865.]

EVERY dollar of the debt created to aid the rebellion against the United States should be repudiated finally and forever. The great mass of the people should not be taxed to pay a debt to aid in carrying on a rebellion which they in fact, if left to themselves, were opposed to. Let those who have given their means for the obligations of the State look to that power they tried to establish in violation of law, constitution, and will of the people. They must meet their fate. It is their misfortune, and cannot be recognized by the people of any State professing themselves loyal to the government of the United States and in the Union. I repeat that the loyal people of North Carolina should be exonerated from the payment of every dollar of indebtedness created to aid in the rebellion. I trust and hope that the people of North Carolina will wash their hands of everything that partakes in the slightest degree of the rebellion, which has been so recently crushed by the strong arm of the government in carrying out the obligations imposed by the Constitution of the Union.

Organizing a New State Government

Senate Ex. Doc. no 26, 39 Cong., 1 Sess., p. 24. In similar manner the conventions of the other Southern states provided for setting up new administrations. [October 10, 1865]

Be it ordained by the delegates of the people of the State of North Carolina in convention assembled . . . That a general assembly of the State shall be convened on the fourth Monday of November, eighteen hundred and sixty-five, the members thereof shall hold their places till the next election of such members, which shall be held on the first Thursday of August, eighteen hundred and sixty-six. . .

The provisional governor is hereby authorized and requested to issue forthwith to the sheriff of each county a writ, directing that an election be held for the senators and members of the house of commons of such general assembly on the second Thursday of November next, under the rules, regulations, and provisions of [the ante-bellum] code. . .

Immediately on the receipt of the writ, each sheriff shall summon the justices of the peace of the courts of pleas and quarter sessions to assemble at the court-house on a day appointed by him, which shall be as early as practicable; and they, or so many as may assemble, shall appoint inspectors for each place of election, who shall be forthwith notified of their appointment by the sheriff, and they shall conduct the elections and make returns of the polls in the manner prescribed in said [code]. . .

Each member and voter shall be qualified according to the now existing constitution of the State: . . . no one shall be eligible to a seat or be capable of voting who, being free in all respects, shall not before the twenty-ninth day of May, eighteen hundred and sixty-five, either have voluntarily taken and subscribed the oath of amnesty prescribed in the proclamations of President Lincoln, with the purpose to suppress the insurrection and restore the authority of the United States, and thereforward shall have observed the same; or shall not have taken and subscribed the oath of amnesty prescribed in the proclamation of President Johnson, [of May 29, 1865] and who, moreover, shall not, in either case, be of those who are excepted from the amnesty granted by any of the said proclamations, unless pardoned; . . . all persons who may have preferred petitions for pardon shall be deemed to have been pardoned, if the fact of being pardoned shall be announced by the governor, although the pardon may not have been received. . .

For the purpose of ascertaining the qualifications of persons proposing to vote, the inspectors may, and it shall be their duty, whenever the vote may be challenged, or they shall have cause to suspect that he is not duly qualified, examine him and others on oath, touching the question. . .

At the same time and places, elections shall be held for seven representatives in the Congress of the United States . . . which shall be conducted under the rules and regulations prescribed [in the code] for such elections; and the voters in said elections shall be such only as shall be qualified to vote for members of the house of commons. . .

At the same time and place, an election shall be held for a governor of the State, under the same rules and regulations . . . and the persons qualified to vote for members of the house of commons, under this ordinance, shall be qualified to vote for governor. . .

No person shall be eligible as governor unless he shall be qualified according to the constitution of the State, and also shall be capable, under the provisions of this ordinance, of voting for members of the general assembly. . .

The governor thus elected shall take his seat as soon as the authority of the provisional governor shall cease. . .

The governor thus elected shall continue in office till the first day of January eighteen hundred and sixty-seven.

Laws in Force after the War

Senate Ex. Doc. no. 26, 39 Cong., 1 Sess., p. 35. Similar ordinances were passed by the other state conventions in the South.

[October 18, 1865]

WHEREAS doubt may arise, from the late attempt of the State of North Carolina to secede from the United States, whether any, and what, laws have been, and are now, in force, and what acts, done by officers and individuals, are valid and obligatory: Now, for the purpose of preventing such doubt about these and other matters hereinafter mentioned,

Be it declared and ordained by the delegates of the people of the State of North Carolina. . .

1. All laws of the State, except as hereinafter is excepted, which on the twentieth day of May, eighteen hundred and sixty-one,¹ were compatible with the allegiance of the citizens of the State to the governor of the United States, and not since repealed or modified; and all the laws and ordinances passed since that day, except as hereinafter is excepted, compatible with such allegiance and not since repealed or modified, and which are consistent with the constitution of the State and the United States, are hereby declared to have been, at all times since their enactment, and now to be, in full force, . . . as if the State had not on that day . . . attempted to secede from the government of the United States, and as if no question had been made of the lawful authority of the convention assembled on that day, or of any general assembly assembled since that day, to enact such laws and ordinances, and all other of said ordinances and laws are hereby declared to have been and to be null and void. . .

2. All the judicial proceedings had, or which may be had, in the courts of record and before justice of the peace, shall be deemed and held valid in like manner . . . as if the State had not . . . attempted to secede from the United States.

1. The date of secession.

3. All contracts, executory and executed, of every nature and kind, made on or since the twentieth day of May, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, and all marriages solemnized on or since that day, under any authority purporting to be the law of the State, shall be deemed to be valid and binding between the parties . . . as if the State had not . . . attempted to secede from the United States; and it shall be the duty of the general assembly to provide a scale of depreciation of the Confederate currency from the time of its first issue to the end of the war; and all executory contracts, solvable in money, whether under seal or not, made after the depreciation of said currency, before the first day of May, eighteen hundred and sixty-five, and yet unfulfilled, (except official bonds and penal bonds payable to the State,) shall be deemed to have been made with the understanding that they were solvable in money of the value of said currency; it shall be competent for either of the parties to show, by parol or other relevant testimony, what the understanding was in regard to the kind of currency in which the same are solvable; and in such case, the true understanding shall regulate the value of the contract: Provided, That in case the plaintiff, in any suit upon such contracts, will make an affidavit that it was solvable in other currency than that above referred to, then such presumption shall cease, and it shall be presumed to be payable in such currency as shall be mentioned in the affidavit, subject to explanation by evidence as aforesaid.

4. All the acts and doings of the civil officers of the State since the twentieth day of May, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, done, . . . under or in virtue of any authority purporting to be a law of the State which is consistent with its allegiance to the United States, and with the constitution of the State, shall be deemed valid and of the same force and effect as if the State had not . . . attempted to secede from the United States.

5. No person who may have been in the civil or military service of the State, or of the Confederate States, shall be held for any act done . . . in the proper discharge of the duties imposed on him by any authority purporting to be a law of the State, or Confederate States government; but such persons shall be exempt from all personal liability therefor, . . . as if such act had been done under lawful authority. . .

6. All the acts and deeds of the provisional governor of the State, appointed by the President of the United States, and likewise all the acts of any officer or agent by him appointed . . . are hereby ratified and declared to be valid. . .

7. All provisions for a change in those rates of taxation that were in force upon the twentieth of May eighteen hundred and sixty-one . . . are hereby repealed.

Constitution of Alabama, 1865.

[September 30, 1865]

Art. VIII. Sec. 1. The Thirteenth Amendment

Acts and Resolutions, 38 Cong., 2 Sess., p. 168. The resolution proposing this amendment passed the Senate April 8, 1864, and the House, January 31, 1865. President Johnson required the governments that he had established in the South to ratify this amendment and thus secured ratification of the requisite three-fourths of the States.

[December 18, 1865]

ARTICLE XIII

Sec. 1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, save as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

Sec. 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Stanton's Opinion of Johnson's Policy in 1866

Annual Cyclopaedia, 1866, p. 753.

THESE measures received the cordial support of every member of the Cabinet, and were approved by the sentiments declared by conventions in nearly all of the States. One point of difference presented itself, namely, the basis of representation. By some it was thought just and expedient that the right of suffrage in the rebel States should be secured in some form to the colored inhabitants of those States, either as a universal rule, or to those qualified by education, or by actual service as soldiers who ventured life for their Government. My own mind inclined to this view, but after calm and full discussion my judgment yielded to the adverse arguments resting upon the practical difficulties to be encountered in such a measure, and the President's conviction that to prescribe rules of suffrage was not within the legitimate scope of his power. . .

The President's Report on Restoration

Richardson, Messages and Papers, vol. vi, pp. 357, 372. Annual message to Congress, December 4, and special message to Senate, December 18, 1865. [1865]

[December 4, 1865]. . . I have . . gradually and quietly, and by almost imperceptible steps, sought to restore the rightful energy of the General Government and of the States. To that end, provisional governors have been appointed for the States, conventions called, governors elected, legislatures assembled, and senators and representatives chosen to the Congress of the United States. At the same time, the courts of the United States, as far as could be done, have been re-opened, so that the laws of the United States may be enforced through their agency. The blockade has been removed and the customs houses re-established in ports of entry, so that the revenue of the United States may be collected. The Post Office Department renews its ceaseless activity, and the General Government is thereby enabled to communicate promptly with its officers and agents. The courts bring security to persons and property; the opening of the ports invites the restoration of industry and commerce; the post office removes the facilities of social intercourse and of business. . .

FACSIMILE (REDUCED) OF PART OF BANCROFT'S DRAFT OF PRESIDENT JOHNSON'S MESSAGE, DECEMBER 4, 1865; AND HIS LETTER TO JOHNSON, NOVEMBER 9, 1865

[December 18, 1865] As the result of the measures instituted by the Executive, with the view of inducing a resumption of the functions of the States, . . . the people in North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Tennessee, have reorganized their respective State governments, and "are yielding obedience to the laws and Government of the United States" with more willingness and greater promptitude than under the circumstances could reasonably have been anticipated. The proposed amendment to the Constitution, providing for the abolition of slavery forever within the limits of the country, has been ratified by each one of those States, with the exception of Mississippi, from which no official information has yet been received; and in nearly all of them measures have been adopted or are now pending, to confer upon freedmen rights and privileges which are essential to their comfort, protection and security. In Florida and Texas the people are making commendable progress in restoring their state governments, and no doubt is entertained that they will at an early period be in condition to resume all of their practical relations to the Federal Government.

In "that portion of the Union lately in rebellion" the aspect of affairs is more promising than, in view of all the circumstances, could well have been expected. The people throughout the entire South evince a laudable desire to renew their allegiance to the Government, and to repair the devastations of war by a prompt and cheerful return to peaceful pursuits. An abiding faith is entertained that their actions will conform to their professions, and that in acknowledging the supremacy of the Constitution and the laws of the United States, their loyalty will be unreservedly given to the Government. . .

In some of the States the demoralizing effects of the war are to be seen in occasional disorders; but these are local in character, not frequent in occurrence, and are rapidly disappearing as the authority of civil law is extended and sustained. Perplexing questions were naturally to be expected from the great and sudden change in the relations between the two races; but systems are gradually developing themselves under which the freedman will receive the protection to which he is justly entitled, and by means of his labor make himself a useful and independent member of the community in which he has his home. . . I am induced to cherish the belief that sectional animosity is surely and rapidly merging itself into a spirit of nationality, and that representation, connected with a properly adjusted system of taxation, will result in a harmonious restoration of the relations of the States to the national Union.

2. THE "PROVISIONAL" GOVERNMENTS IN THE SOUTH

Annual Cyclopaedia, 1865. Gov. J. L. Orr's address to the South Carolina legislature. [October, 1865]

THE war has decided first: That . . . the States of the Federal Union have not the right . . . to secede therefrom. The doctrine of secession . . . is now exploded for any practical purpose. The theory of absolute sovereignty of a State of the Federal Union, . . . which was believed almost universally to be a sound constitutional construction, must also be materially modified to conform to this . . . decision. In all the powers granted in the Constitution to the Federal Government, it is supreme and sovereign, and must be obeyed and respected accordingly. Where the rights of a State are disregarded, or unconstitutional acts done by any department of the Federal Government, redress can no longer be sought by interposing the sovereignty of the State, either for nullification or secession; but the remedy is by petition or remonstrance; by reason, which sooner or later will overtake justice; by an appeal to the supreme judicial power of the Union; or by revolution, which if unsuccessful, is treason. . . .

The God of Battles has pronounced an irreversible judgment, after a long, desperate, and sanguinary struggle, and it would be neither politic nor patriotic ever again to invoke a new trial of the fearful issue.

The clemency which President Johnson has so generously extended . . . in granting full and free pardon for participation in the late revolution, does honor to his statesmanship and to his sense of justice. He is the ruling power of a great and triumphant Government, and by his policy will attach by cords stronger than "triple steel" the citizens of one entire section of the Union to that Government which he has . . . supported and maintained. He was well acquainted with the South — with her politics and politicians, and knew . . . that they honestly entertained the sentiments which they professed, and for which they perilled their all; and after failing in the end, when they proposed to return to their loyalty, that humanity and policy dictated that they should not be hunted down for ignominious punishment. . .

The war decided second: That slavery should be totally and absolutely exterminated in all the States of the Union. The Convention of this State, with singular unanimity and promptness, accepted the result of the issue made, and declared in the fundamental law "that slaves having been emancipated by the action of the United States authorities, slavery should never be reëstablished in this State."

The Effects of the Test Oath

House Ex. Doc. no. 81, 39 Cong., 1 Sess. Hugh McCulloch, Secretary of the Treasury, to the President, March 19, 1866. [1866]

I AM well satisfied that it will be difficult, if not impossible, to find competent men at the south to fill the revenue offices, who can qualify under the statute. . . In the progress of the rebellion very few persons of character and intelligence in most of these States failed . . . to participate in the hostilities, or to connect themselves with the insurgent government. This is almost universally true of the young men, who are expected to fill the clerkships and other inferior places in the revenue service. . . For those offices that must soon become vacant if Congress should not deem it to be safe or proper to modify the oath, I am at a loss to know where the right men are to be obtained, or how the revenues in many of the southern districts are to be collected. . . There are still some applicants for office in the southern States who present what they call "a clean record for loyalty," but, with rare exceptions, they are persons who would have been able to present an equally fair record for place under the confederate government if the rebellion had been a success, or persons lacking the qualifications which are needed in revenue positions. . .

I do not consider it advisable for the government to attempt to collect taxes in the southern States by the hands of strangers. . . It would be better for the country, politically and financially, to suspend the collection of internal revenue taxes in the southern States, except in commercial cities, for months, if not for years to come, rather than to undertake to collect them by men not identified with the tax-payers in sympathy or in interest. . .

It is difficult to conceive of a more unfortunate course for the government of the United States to pursue than to make tax-gatherers at the south of men who are strangers to the people.

The "Iron Clad" Test Oath

Statutes at Large, vol. xii, p. 592. This oath was modified for members of Congress in 1868, for jurors June 30, 1879, and May 13, 1884, and finally all of it was repealed on June 6, 1898. There are some laws still on the statute book keeping in force the principles of this oath. See Revised Statutes, sec. 5334. [July 2, 1862]

Be it enacted, . . . That hereafter every person elected or appointed to any office of honor or profit under the government of the United States, either in the civil, military or naval departments of the public service, excepting the President of the United States, shall, before entering upon the duties of such office, and before being entitled to any of the salary or other emoluments thereof, take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation: "I, A. B., do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I have never voluntarily borne arms against the United States since I have been a citizen thereof; that I have voluntarily given no aid, countenance, counsel, or encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility thereto; that I have neither sought nor accepted nor attempted to exercise the functions of any office whatever, under any authority or pretended authority in hostility to the United States; that I have not yielded a voluntary support to any pretended government, authority, power or constitution within the United States, hostile or inimical thereto. And I do further swear (or affirm) that, to the best of my knowledge and ability, I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States, against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion, and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter, so help me God;" which said oath, so taken and signed, shall be preserved among the files of the court, House of Congress, or Department to which the said office may appertain. And any person who shall falsely take the said oath shall be guilty of perjury, and on conviction, in addition to the penalties now prescribed for that offence, shall be deprived of his office and rendered incapable forever after of holding any office or place under the United States.

The Alabama Legislature on the State of the Union

Acts of Alabama. 1865-1866, p. 606. Passed after Congress had refused to accept the President's work of restoration.

[February 22, 1866]

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Alabama, in General Assembly convened, That the people of Alabama, and their representatives here assembled, cordially approve the policy pursued by Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, in the reorganization of the Union. We accept the result of the late contest, and do not desire to renew what has been so conclusively determined; nor do we mean to permit any one subject to our control to attempt its renewal, or to violate any of our obligations to the United States Government. We mean to coöperate in the wise, firm, and just policy adopted by the President, with all the energy and power we can devote to that object.

2. That the above declaration expresses the sentiments and purposes of our people, and we denounce the efforts of those who represent our views and intentions to be different, as cruel and criminal assaults on our character and our interests. It is one of the misfortunes of our present political condition that we have among us persons whose interests are temporarily promoted by such false representations; but we rely on the intelligence and integrity of those who wield the power of the United States Government for our safeguard against such malign influences.

3. That involuntary servitude, except for crime, is abolished, and ought not to be reëstablished, and that the negro race among us should be treated with justice, humanity and good faith, and every means that the wisdom of the Legislature can devise should be used to make them useful and intelligent members of society.

4. That Alabama will not voluntarily consent to change the adjustment of political power, as fixed by the Constitution of the United States, and to constrain her to do so in her present prostrate and helpless condition, with no voice in the councils of the nation, would be an unjustifiable breach of faith; and that her earnest thanks are due to the President for the firm stand he has taken against amendments of the Constitution, forced through in the present condition of affairs.

The Legal End of the War

Richardson, Messages and Papers, vol. vi, p. 431. Proclamation of President Johnson, April 2, 1866. Texas was excepted until August 20, 1866. [1866]

AND whereas there now exists no organized armed resistance of misguided citizens or others to the authority of the United States in the States of Georgia, South Carolina, Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, Alabama, Louisiana, Arkansas, Mississippi and Florida, and the laws can be sustained and enforced therein by the proper civil authority, State or Federal, and the people of the said States are well and loyally disposed, and have conformed or will conform in their legislation to the condition of affairs growing out of the amendment to the Constitution of the United States, prohibiting slavery within the limits and jurisdiction of the United States:

And whereas, in view of the before recited premises, it is the manifest determination of the American people that no State, of its own will has the right or power to go out of, or separate itself from, or be separated from the American Union, and that therefore each State ought to remain and constitute an integral part of the United States;

And whereas the people of the several before mentioned States have, in the manner aforesaid, given satisfactory evidence that they acquiesce in this sovereign and important resolution of national unity;

And whereas it is believed to be a fundamental principle of government that people who have been overcome and subdued, must either be dealt with so as to induce them voluntarily to become friends, or else they must be held by absolute military power, or devastated, so as to prevent them from ever again doing harm as enemies, which last named policy is abhorrent to humanity and freedom;

And whereas the Constitution of the United States provides for constituent communities only as States and not as Territories, dependencies, provinces, or protectorates;

And whereas such constituent States must necessarily be and by the constitution and laws of the United States are made equals and placed upon a like footing as to political rights, immunities, dignity, and power, with the several States with which they are united;

And whereas the observance of political equality as a principle of right and justice is well calculated to encourage the people of the aforesaid States to be and become more and more constant and persevering in their renewed allegiance;

And whereas standing armies, military occupation, military law, military tribunals, and the suspension of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus are, in time of peace, dangerous to public liberty, incompatible with the individual rights of the citizen, contrary to the genius and spirit of our free institutions, and exhaustive of the national resources, and ought not, therefore, to be sanctioned or allowed, except in cases of actual necessity, for repelling invasion or suppressing insurrection or rebellion;

And whereas the policy of the Government of the United States, from the beginning of the insurrection to its overthrow and final suppression, has been in conformity with the principles herein set forth and enumerated:

Now, therefore, I, Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, do hereby proclaim and declare that the insurrection which heretofore existed in the States of Georgia, South Carolina, Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, Alabama, Louisiana, Arkansas, Mississippi and Florida is at an end, and is henceforth to be so regarded.

A Southern Opinion of the "Johnson" Governments

MS. Letter of Wade Hampton to Andrew Johnson. [1866]

HAVING acceded to the terms laid down by your Excellency, they supposed that they would be restored to all their rights as citizens of the U. S. and they believed fully — whether justly or not — that they were entitled to receive these rights, their allegiance to the Government being renewed and all their duties to it being . . . exacted, but the construction which the South placed upon the covenant which had been made, seems not to have been the one received by the authorities at Washington, for no sooner had the South conformed to the terms of your Proclamation than other conditions were imposed. . . . First, she found all her state authorities set aside — her Governors imprisoned — her legislatures broken up — her Judiciary suppressed — her press muzzled — her Temples closed — all by the arbitrary hand of military power. Then came the appointment of Presidential Governors, an anomaly heretofore unknown in a Government composed of states which were once supposed to possess some at least of the attributes of sovereignty. By the exercise of an authority . . . — whence derived has never been clearly explained — these Presidential Governors called conventions in their several states and new Legislatures were ordered to be chosen. These conventions, once the highest tribunals recognized by sovereign states, the great High Courts of a free people — met, registered the decrees framed at Washington and disappeared. After an existence as inglorious as it was brief, "unwept, unhonored and unsung" each convention was followed by its own bastard offspring, the Legislature of its creation, a political "nullius filius" — a body somewhat "after the order of Melchisedec, without father, without mother, without descent," fit successors of most unhonored predecessors. I speak of these bodies in their political and collective capacity, not of the individuals composing them, for that these latter were actuated in most instances by the highest patriotism is evidenced by the fact that for the sake of the country, they consented to serve in Mr. Seward's Legislatures. When these Legislatures met in what was literally "extraordinary session" what a spectacle was presented! In these halls where once the free representatives of sovereign states were wont to discuss the highest questions of polity, all subjects were strictly tabooed save such as were dictated from Washington, and it required no great stretch of imagination to fancy that one heard in the votes but the echoes of Mr. Seward's "little bell." The telegraph lines offered a ready means by which that manipulator could use to its fullest extent his "judicious admixture of pressure and persuasion," and under this new but convenient system the proceedings of the Legislatures consisted solely in recording the dicta of the Supreme Justice in Washington.

3. OPPOSITION OF CONGRESS

Congress Rejects the President's Work

Statutes at Large, vol. xiv, p. 27. Passed over the President's veto it was later incorporated in the Fourteenth Amendment. This was the first important measure passed over Johnson's veto. The next was the Freedmen's Bureau Act. [April 9, 1866]

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, That a joint committee of fifteen members shall be appointed, nine of whom shall be members of the House and six members of the Senate, who shall enquire into the conditions of the States which formed the so-called Confederate States of America, and report whether they or any of them are entitled to be represented in either House of Congress, with leave to report at any time by bill or otherwise; and until such report shall have been made and finally acted upon by Congress, no member shall be received into either House from any of the said so-called Confederate States; and all papers relating to the representation of the said States shall be referred to the said committee without debate.

Civil Rights Act of 1866

Statutes at Large, vol. xiv, p. 27. Passed over the President's veto on April 6 by the Senate and on April 9 by the House. In principle it was later incorporated in the Fourteenth Amendment. This was the first important measure passed over Johnson's veto. The next was the Freedmen's Bureau Act. [April 9, 1866]

Be it enacted, . . . That all persons born in the United States and not subject to any foreign power, excluding Indians not taxed, are hereby declared to be citizens of the United States; and such citizens, of every race and color, without regard to any previous condition of slavery or involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall have the same right, in every State and Territory in the United States, to make and enforce contracts, to sue, be parties, and give evidence, to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold, and convey real and personal property, and to full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings for the security of person and property, as is enjoyed by white citizens, and shall be subject to like punishment, pains and penalties, and to none other, any law, statute, ordinance, regulation, or custom, to the contrary notwithstanding.

Sec. 2. . . Any person who, under color of any law, statute, ordinance, regulation, or custom, shall subject, or cause to be subjected, any inhabitant of any State or Territory to the deprivation of any right secured or protected by this act, or to different punishment, pains, or penalties on account of such person having at any time been held in a condition of slavery or involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, or by reason of his color or race, than is prescribed for the punishment of white persons, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, shall be punished by fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Sec. 3. . . The district courts of the United States . . shall have, exclusively of the courts of the several States, cognizance of all crimes and offenses committed against the provisions of this act, and also, concurrently with the circuit courts of the United States, of all causes, civil and criminal, affecting persons who are denied or cannot enforce in the courts or judicial tribunals of the State or locality where they may be any of the rights secured to them by the first section of this act; and if any suit or prosecution, civil or criminal, has been or shall be commenced in any State court, against any such person, for any cause whatsoever, or against any officer, civil or military, or other person, for any arrest or imprisonment, trespasses, or wrongs done or committed by virtue or under color of authority derived from this act or the act establishing a Bureau for the relief of Freedmen and Refugees, and all acts amendatory thereof, or for refusing to do any act upon the ground that it would be inconsistent with this act, such defendant shall have the right to remove such cause for trial to the proper district or circuit court. . . The jurisdiction in civil and criminal matters hereby conferred on the district and circuit courts of the United States shall be exercised and enforced in conformity with the laws of the United States, so far as such laws are suitable to carry the same into effect; but in all cases where such laws are not adapted to the object, or are deficient in the provisions necessary to furnish suitable remedies and punish offenses against law, the common law, as modified and changed by the constitution and statute of the State wherein the court having jurisdiction of the cause, civil or criminal, is held, so far as the same is not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States, shall be extended to and govern said courts in the trial and disposition of said cause, and, if of a criminal nature, in the infliction of punishment on the party found guilty.

Sec. 4. . . The district attorneys, marshals, and deputy marshals of the United States, the commissioners appointed by the circuit and territorial courts of the United States, with powers of arresting, imprisoning or bailing offenders against the laws of the United States, the officers and agents of the Freedmen's Bureau, and every other officer who may be specially empowered by the President of the United States, shall be, and they are hereby, specially authorized and required, . . . to institute proceedings against all and every person who shall violate the provisions of this act, and cause him or them to be arrested and imprisoned, or bailed, as the case may be, for trial before such court of the United States or territorial court as by this act has cognizance of the offense. And with a view to affording reasonable protection to all persons in their constitutional rights of equality before the law, without distinction of race or color, or previous condition of slavery or involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, and to the prompt discharge of the duties of this act, it shall be the duty of the circuit courts of the United States, and the superior courts of the Territories of the United States, from time to time, to increase the number of commissioners, so as to afford a speedy and convenient means for the arrest and examination of persons charged with a violation of this act; and such commissioners are hereby authorized and required to exercise and discharge all the powers and duties conferred on them by this act, and the same duties with regard to offenses created by this act, as they are authorized by law to exercise with regard to other offenses against the laws of the United States.

Sec. 5. . . It shall be the duty of all marshals and deputy marshals to obey and execute all warrants and precepts issued under the provisions of this act, when to them directed; and should any marshal or deputy marshal refuse to receive such warrant or other process when tendered, or to use all proper means diligently to execute the same, he shall, on conviction thereof, be fined in the sum of one thousand dollars, to the use of the persons upon whom the accused is alleged to have committed the offense. And the better to enable the said commissioners to execute their duties faithfully and efficiently, in conformity with the Constitution of the United States and the requirements of this act, they are hereby authorized and empowered, within their counties respectively, to appoint in writing, under their hands, any one or more suitable persons, from time to time, to execute all such warrants and other such process as may be issued by them in the lawful performance of their respective duties: and the persons so appointed to execute any warrant or process as aforesaid shall have authority to summon and call to their aid the bystanders or posse comitatus of the proper county, or such portion of the land or naval forces of the United States, or of the militia, as may be necessary to the performance of the duty with which they are charged, and to insure a faithful observance of the clause of the Constitution which prohibits slavery, in conformity with the provisions of this act; and such warrants shall run and be executed by said officers anywhere in the State or Territory within which they are issued.

Sec. 6. . . Any person who shall knowingly and wilfully obstruct, hinder or prevent any officer, or other person charged with the execution of any warrant or process issued under the provisions of this act, or any person or persons lawfully assisting him or them, from arresting any person for whose apprehension such warrant or process may have been issued, or shall rescue or attempt to rescue such person from the custody of the officer, other person or persons, or those lawfully assisting as aforesaid, when so arrested pursuant to the authority herein given and declared, or shall aid, abet, or assist any person so arrested as aforesaid, directly or indirectly, to escape from the custody of the officer or other person legally authorized as aforesaid, or shall harbor or conceal any person for whose arrest a warrant or process shall have been issued as aforesaid, so as to prevent his discovery and arrest after notice or knowledge of the fact that a warrant has been issued for the apprehension of such person, shall for either of said offenses, be subject to a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, and imprisonment not exceeding six months, by indictment and conviction before the district court of the United States for the district in which said offense may have been committed, or before the proper court or criminal jurisdiction, if committed within any one of the organized Territories of the United States.

Sec. 7. [Relates to fees, etc.]

Sec. 8. . . Whenever the President of the United States shall have reason to believe that offenses have been or are likely to be committed against the provisions of this act within any judicial district, it shall be lawful for him, in his discretion, to direct the judge, marshal, and district attorney of such district to attend at such place within the district, and for such time as he may designate, for the purpose of the more speedy arrest and trial of persons charged with violation of this act; and it shall be the duty of every judge or other officer, when any such requisition shall be received by him, to attend at the place and for the time therein designated.

Sec. 9. . . It shall be lawful for the President of the United States, or such person as he may empower for that purpose, to employ such part of the land or naval forces of the United States, or of the militia, as shall be necessary to prevent the violation and enforce the due execution of this act.

Sec. 10. . . Upon all questions of law arising in any cause under the provisions of this act a final appeal may be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The Restoration of Tennessee

Statutes at Large, vol. xiv, p. 364. The attitude of Congress toward the President's plans is shown in the preamble. [July 24, 1866]

Whereas, in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-one, the government of the State of Tennessee was seized upon and taken possession of by persons in hostility to the United States, and the inhabitants of said State in pursuance of an act of Congress were declared to be in a state of insurrection against the United States; and whereas said State government can only be restored to its former political relations in the Union by the consent of the law-making power of the United States; and whereas the people of said State did, on the twenty-second day of February, eighteen hundred and sixty-five, by a large popular vote, adopt and ratify a constitution of government whereby slavery was abolished, and all ordinances and laws of secession and debts contracted under the same were declared void; and whereas a State government has been organized under said Constitution which has ratified the amendment to the Constitution of the United States abolishing slavery, also the amendment proposed by the thirty-ninth Congress, and has done other acts proclaiming and denoting loyalty; therefore,

Be it resolved, . . . That the State of Tennessee is hereby restored to her former proper, practical relations to the Union, and is again entitled to be represented by senators and representatives in Congress.

4. MILITARY GOVERNMENT, 1865-1866

War Department Archives. The following general orders will illustrate the activity of the army before and during the existence of the governments set up by the President. [1865-1866]

[*G. O. No. 5, Military Division of the James,
May 3, 1865. Gen. Halleck*]

I. A Court of Conciliation, consisting of three Arbitrators will be established in the city of Richmond.

II. This Court will arbitrate such cases as may be brought before it in regard to the right of possession of property, both personal and real, and to the payment of rents and debts, where contracts were made upon the basis of confederate currency, which now has no legal existence. This Court will take no jurisdiction of questions of title to property, nor will its decision be any bar to legal remedies when the civil laws and civil courts are re-established.

III. The Court will issue the regular process for the attendance of parties and witnesses and the execution of its decisions; appoint its clerks and other officers; and adopt rules for its proceedings. The fees charged will be simply sufficient to pay its expenses. Any surplus will be given to the poor. All parties bringing suit in this Court, and all attorneys and agents appearing for them, will be required to take the amnesty oath. No fees will be charged the poor.

IV. In its decisions the Court will be governed by the principles of equity and justice. All alike, white and colored, will be allowed the benefit of its jurisdiction. All proceedings will be simple and brief, and directed solely to ascertaining and securing exact justice.

V. The Provost Marshal will refer to this Court all questions which come properly within the jurisdiction, and will adopt its decisions so far as concerns the disposition of property belonging to private parties, now in his hands.

VI. As soon as the civil courts are re-established the Court of Conciliation will cease its functions.

[G. O. No. 98, Department of North Carolina,
July 10, 1865. Gen. Ruger]

Sufficient time having elapsed for all those formerly officers in the so-called confederate service to remove all badges, military buttons, braid, cord, or other articles designating rank, as required by good taste and a proper respect for the government of their country, it is directed that they now remove them.

All persons found with such articles on, five days after the publication of this order at any post, will have the same taken off them by the Provost Marshal (unless satisfactory evidence is furnished by the wearers of their ignorance of this order,) and will be detained in arrest for violation of the same. Commanders of Districts will circulate this order at once after receiving it, and cause particular information to be given to all persons known to wear such insignia.

[G. O. No. 129, July 25, 1865. War Department.
Secretary of War]

To secure equal justice and the same personal liberty to the freedmen as to other citizens and inhabitants, all orders issued by post, district, or other commanders, adopting any system of passes for them or subjecting them to any restraints or punishments not imposed on other classes, are declared void.

Neither whites nor blacks will be restrained from seeking employment elsewhere when they cannot obtain it at a just compensation at their homes, and when not bound by voluntary agreement; nor will they be hindered from traveling from place to place on proper and legitimate business.

July 27, 1865. Gen. Q. A. Gilmore]

V. The [Provost] courts . . shall have power to try all cases between citizens, and between citizens and soldiers, and all crimes and all violations of military orders and the laws of the United States which do not come within the jurisdiction of a court martial, and to issue the regular process for the attendance of witnesses, and decrees for the possession of property, and for the payment of debts, damages and costs. The decrees will go only to the right of possession and not of property. They may impose fines not exceeding one hundred dollars . . . and imprisonment not exceeding two months. Offenses by citizens requiring a severe punishment, will be tried by a military commission. They will appoint their clerks and their officers, shall keep a record of their proceedings subject to the revision of subdistrict and higher commanders, and will adopt rules and forms of procedure, which shall be as simple as possible. Citizen members of courts may be allowed three dollars for each days' attendance. The fees charged will be merely sufficient to pay all expenses.

VI. Appeals from the Provost Courts will be had to the sub-district and district commanders, under such rules and on such terms as the district commanders may provide.

VII. All parties to suits before the . . . Provost Courts may employ counsel. But all persons bringing suit or appearing as counsel before said courts, as well as the citizen members of said courts, will be required to give proof that they have taken the oath of allegiance.

[Secretary Stanton to Gen. G. H. Thomas at Nashville, August 8, 1865]

GENERAL: It having been determined by the Government to relinquish control over all railroads . . . that have been in charge of, and are now occupied by the United States Military authorities, and no longer needed for military purposes, you are hereby authorized and directed to turn over the same to the respective owners thereof, at as early a date as practicable, causing in all cases of transfer as aforesaid, the following regulations to be observed and carried out:

1. Each and every Company will be required to re-organize, and elect a Board of Directors, whose loyalty shall be established to your satisfaction.

2. You will cause to be made out in triplicate, by such person or persons, as you may indicate, a complete inventory of the rolling stock, tools, and other materials and property on each road.

3. Separate inventories will be in the same manner made of the rolling stock, and other property originally belonging to each of said roads, and that furnished by and belonging to the Government.

4. Each Company will be required to give bonds satisfactory to the Government, that they will in twelve months from the date of transfer, as aforesaid, or such other reasonable time as may be agreed upon, pay a fair valuation for the Government property turned over to said companies, the same being first appraised by competent and disinterested parties, at a fair valuation, the United States reserving all Government dues for carrying mails, and other service performed by each Company, until said obligations are paid; and if, at the maturity of said debt, the amount of Government dues retained as aforesaid does not liquidate the same, the balance is to be paid by the Company in money.

5. Tabular statements will be made of all expenditures by the Government for repairing each road, with a full statement of receipts from private freights, passage, and other sources; also a full statement of all transportation performed on Government account, giving the number of persons transported, and amount of freight, and the distance carried in each case, all of said reports or tabular statements to be made in triplicate; one each for the Secretary of War, the Military Head-Quarters of the Department, and the Railroad Company.

6. All railroads in Tennessee will be required to pay all arrearages of interest due on the bonds issued by that State prior to the date of its pretended secession from the Union, to aid in the construction of said roads, before any dividends are declared or paid to the stockholders thereof.

7. Buildings erected for government purposes on the line of railroads, and not valuable or useful for the business of said companies, should not form a legitimate charge against such companies, nor should they be charged for rebuilding houses, does not liquidate the same, the balance is to be paid by the bridges, or other structures, which were destroyed by the Federal army.

January 1, 1866. Gen. D. E. Sickles*]

. . II. All laws shall be applicable alike to all the inhabitants. No person shall be held incompetent to sue, make complaint, or to testify, because of color or caste.

III. All the employments of husbandry or of the useful arts, and all lawful trades or callings, may be followed by all persons, irrespective of color or caste; nor shall any freedmen be obliged to pay any tax or any fee for a license, nor be amenable to any municipal or parish ordinance, not imposed upon all other persons. . .

IV. . . No person will be restrained from seeking employment when not bound by voluntary agreement, nor hindered from travelling from place to place on lawful business. All combinations or agreements which are intended to hinder . . the employment of labor — or to limit compensation for labor — or to compel labor to be involuntarily performed in certain places or for certain persons; as well as all combinations or agreements to prevent the sale or hire of lands or tenements, are declared to be misdemeanors; and any person or persons convicted thereof shall be punished by fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, or by imprisonment, not to exceed six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment. . .

VI. Freed persons unable to labor, by reason of age, or infirmity, and orphan persons of tender years, shall have allotted to them by the owners suitable quarters on the premises where they have been heretofore domiciled as slaves, until adequate provision approved by the General Commanding, be made for them by the State or local authorities, or otherwise; and they shall not be removed from the premises, unless for disorderly behavior, misdemeanor, or other offense committed by the head of a family or a member thereof.

VII. Ablebodied freedmen, when they leave the premises in which they may be domiciled, shall take with them and provide for such of their relatives, as, by the laws of South Carolina, all citizens are obliged to maintain.

VIII. When a freed person, domiciled on a plantation, refuses to work there, after having been offered employment by the owner or lessee, on fair terms, approved by the agent of the Freedmen's Bureau, such freedman or woman, shall remove from the premises within ten days after such offer, and due notice to remove by the owner or occupant.

IX. When ablebodied freed persons are domiciled on premises where they have been heretofore held as slaves, and are not employed thereon or elsewhere, they shall be permitted to remain, on showing to the satisfaction of the Commanding officer of the Post that they have made diligent and proper efforts to obtain employment. . . .

XI. Any person employed or domiciled on a plantation or elsewhere, who may be rightfully dismissed by the terms of agreement, or expelled for misbehavior, shall leave the premises, and shall not return without consent of the owner or tenant thereof. . . .

XIII. The vagrant laws of the State of South Carolina, applicable to free white persons, will be recognized as the only vagrant laws applicable to freedmen. . . .

XV. The proper authorities of the State in the several municipalities and Districts, shall proceed to make suitable provisions for their poor, without distinction of color; in default of which, the General Commanding will levy an equitable tax on persons and property sufficient for the support of the poor.

XVI. The constitutional rights of all loyal and well disposed inhabitants to bear arms, will not be infringed; nevertheless this shall not be construed to sanction the unlawful practice of carrying concealed weapons; nor to authorize any person to enter with arms on the premises of another without his consent. No one shall bear arms who has borne arms against the United States, unless he shall have taken the Amnesty oath prescribed in the Proclamation of the President of the United States, dated May 29th, 1865, or the Oath of Allegiance, prescribed in the Proclamation of the President, dated December 8th, 1863, within the time prescribed therein. . .

XVII. . . No penalties or punishments different from those to which all persons are amenable, shall be imposed on freed people; and all crimes and offenses which are prohibited under existing laws, shall be understood as prohibited in the case of freedmen; and if committed by a freedman, shall, upon conviction, be punished in the same manner as if committed by a white man.

XVIII. Corporal punishment shall not be inflicted upon any person other than a minor, and then only by the parent, guardian, teacher, or one to whom said minor is lawfully bound by indenture of apprenticeship. . .

[G. O. No. 3, War Department, Adjutant General's Office, Gen. Grant, January 12, 1866]

Military Division and Department Commanders, whose commands embrace, or are composed of, any of the late rebellious States, and who have not already done so, will at once issue and enforce orders protecting from prosecution or suits in the State or Municipal Courts of such States, all officers and soldiers of the armies of the United States, and all persons thereto attached, or in any wise thereto belonging, subject to military authority, charged with offences for acts done in their military capacity or pursuant to orders from proper military authority; and to protect from suit or prosecution all loyal citizens or persons charged with offences done against the rebel forces, directly or indirectly, during the existence of the rebellion, and all persons, their agents or employees, charged with the occupancy of abandoned lands or plantations, or the possession or custody of any kind of property whatever, who occupied, used, possessed, or controlled the same, pursuant to the order of the President, or any of the Civil or Military Departments of the Government, and to protect them from any penalties or damages that may have been or may be pronounced or adjudged in said Courts in any such cases; and also protecting colored persons from prosecutions in any of said States charged with offenses for which white persons are not prosecuted or punished in the same manner and degree.

[Gen. Grant to Gen. H. G. Wright of Department of Texas, February 17, 1866]

You will please send to these Headquarters, as soon as practicable, and from time to time thereafter, such copies of newspapers published in your Department as contain sentiments of disloyalty and hostility to the Government in any of its branches, and state whether such paper is habitual in its utterances of such sentiments. The persistent publication of articles calculated to keep up a hostility of feeling between the people of different sections of the country, can not be tolerated. This information is called for with a view to their suppression, which will be done from these Headquarters only.

[G. O. No. 6, Military Division of the Tennessee, February 21, 1866. Gen. Thomas]

The officers of the Treasury Department of the United States, charged with the collection of Direct Taxes and Internal Revenues in the several States composing this Military Division, having been, by reason of the refusal of certain individuals to cancel their just indebtedness to the Government, repeatedly compelled to invoke the aid and assistance of military authority in the full performance of their duties — it is hereby ordered, that hereafter any and all persons neglecting or refusing to pay to the proper officers such . . . [taxes] shall be liable to arrest and trial before a military commission.

[G. O. No. 44, July 6, 1866. Gen. Grant]

Department, District, and Post Commanders in the States lately in rebellion are hereby directed to arrest all persons who have been or may hereafter be charged with the commission of crimes and offenses against officers, agents, citizens, and inhabitants of the United States, irrespective of color, in cases where the civil authorities have failed, neglected, or are unable to arrest and bring such parties to trial, and to detain them in military confinement until such time as a proper judicial tribunal may be ready and willing to try them. A strict and prompt enforcement of this order is required.

[G. O. No. 7, Department of the South, Charleston, September 1, 1866. Gen. Sickles]

I. Organizations of white or colored persons bearing arms, or intended to be armed, not belonging to the military or naval forces of the United States, are unauthorized, and will not be allowed to assemble, parade, patrol, drill, make arrests or exercise any authority. This will not be construed to prohibit the lawful enrollment of the militia. . .

III. Associations or assemblages, composed of persons who served in the rebel forces, having for their object the perpetuation of any military or civil organization engaged in the rebellion, or the commemoration of any of the acts of the insurgents prior to the fatal surrender, will not be permitted. This prohibition will not be enforced against any society formed for a charitable purpose, which shall in good faith confine its action to the relief of the poor.

[G. O. No. 15, Department of the South, Charleston, October 1, 1866. Gen. Sickles]

I. The Civil Courts of the United States for South Carolina are open, and all cases of which they have legal cognizance will be remitted to them. Citizens held for trial for violation of the laws of the United States, will be surrendered to the custody of the United States Marshal, on proper warrant. Depositions, evidence and papers in such cases will be forwarded to the United States District Attorney for South Carolina.

II. The Courts of the State of South Carolina as now constituted and to be organized, are declared by law to be open to all persons, with equal civil rights therein, without distinction or discrimination in any particular, on account of color or former servitude. All cases, civil or criminal, in which the parties are civilians, will be turned over to the judicial tribunals of the State, having jurisdiction of the same. Civilians in military custody, awaiting trial, for offenses against the laws of South Carolina, will be surrendered on proper warrant, to the custody of the Sheriff of the District in which the crime is charged to have been committed; and all depositions, proofs and papers in these cases will be transmitted to the Prosecuting Solicitor for the Circuit in which such District is situated.

III. Military Provost Courts will be discontinued in the several Districts as soon as District Courts shall be organized therein. . .

IV. The jails now in possession of the Military Authorities will be restored to the Sheriffs of the several Districts. Prisoners undergoing sentence of Military Courts, having less than thirty days of their terms of imprisonment unexpired, will be discharged. All other prisoners in Jails, undergoing sentence of Military Courts, will be sent under guard, with a brief statement of the case showing the offense and term of imprisonment, to the Commanding officer of the Post of Charleston, who will cause them to be confined in Castle Pinckney for the remainder of their respective terms of imprisonment.

5. NATIONAL POLITICS, 1866

Secretary Seward on the Questions at Issue

Annual Cyclopaedia, 1866, p. 755.

EXCUSE me for expressing surprise that you ask me whether I approve of the call of a proposed National Union Convention at Philadelphia.

After more than five years of dislocation by civil war, I regard a restoration of the unity of the country as its most immediate as well as its most vital interest. That restoration will be complete when loyal men are admitted as representatives of the loyal people of the eleven States so long unrepresented in Congress. Nothing but this can complete it. Nothing more remains to be done, and nothing more is necessary. Every day's delay is attended by multiplying and increasing inconveniences, embarrassments, and dangers at home and abroad. Congress possesses the power exclusively; Congress after a session of seven months, still omits to exercise that power. "What can be done to induce Congress to act?" This is the question of the day. Whatever is done must be in accordance with the Constitution and laws. It is in perfect accordance with the Constitution and laws that the people of the United States shall assemble by delegates, in convention, and that when so assembled they shall address Congress by respectful petition and remonstrance, and that the people in their several States, districts, and Territories, shall approve, sanction, and unite in such respectful representations to Congress. No one party could do this effectually or even seems willing to do it, alone; no local or popular organization could do it effectually. It is the interest of all parties alike; of all the States, and of all sections — a national interest; the interest of the whole people.

Platform of National Union Party

McPherson, History of Reconstruction, p. 241. Adopted at Philadelphia. [August 14, 1866]

2. The war just closed has maintained the authority of the Constitution with all the powers with which it confers, and all the restrictions which it imposes upon the General Government, unabridged and unaltered, and it has preserved the Union, with the equal rights, dignity, and authority of the States perfect and unimpaired.

3. Representation in the Congress of the United States, and in the electoral college is a right recognized by the Constitution as abiding in every State, and as a duty imposed upon the people, fundamental in its nature, and essential to the existence of our republican institutions, and neither Congress nor the General Government has any authority or power to deny this right to any State, or to withhold its enjoyment under the Constitution from the people thereof.

4. We call upon the people of the United States to elect to Congress as members thereof none but men who admit this fundamental right of representation, and who will receive to seats therein loyal representatives from every State in allegiance to the United States, subject to the constitutional right of each House to judge of elections, returns, and qualification of its own members.

5. The Constitution of the United States, and the laws made in pursuance thereof, are the supreme law of the land, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding. All the powers not conferred by the Constitution upon the General Government, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, or to the people thereof; and among the rights thus reserved to the States, is the right to prescribe qualifications for the elective franchise therein, with which right Congress cannot interfere. No State or combination of States has the right to withdraw from the Union, or to exclude, through their action in Congress or otherwise, any other State or States from the Union. The Union of these States is perpetual.

6. Such amendments to the Constitution of the United States may be made by the people thereof as they may deem expedient, but only in the mode pointed out by its provisions; and in proposing such amendments whether by Congress or by a convention, and in ratifying the same, all the States of the Union have an equal, and indefeasible right to a voice and a vote thereon.

7. Slavery is abolished and forever prohibited, and there is neither desire or purpose on the part of the Southern States that it should ever be reëstablished upon the soil, or within the jurisdiction of the United States; and the enfranchised States in all the States of the Union should receive, in common with all their inhabitants equal protection in every right of person and property.

8. While we regard as utterly invalid, and never to be assumed or made of binding force, any obligations incurred or undertaken in making war against the United States, we hold the debt of the nation to be sacred and inviolable; and we proclaim our purpose in discharging this, as in performing all other national obligations, to maintain unimpaired and unimpeached the honor and faith of the Republic.

9. It is the duty of the National Government to recognize the services of the Federal soldiers and sailors in the contest just closed, by meeting promptly and fully all their just and rightful claim for the services they have rendered the nation, and by extending to those of them who have survived and to the widows and orphans of those who have fallen, the most generous and considerate care.

10. In Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, who, in his great office, has proved steadfast in his devotion to the Constitution, the laws, and interest of his country, unmoved by persecution and undeserved reproach, having faith unassailable in the people and in the principles of free government, we recognize a chief magistrate worthy of the nation, and equal to the great crisis upon which his lot is cast; and we tender to him, in the discharge of his high and responsible duties, our profound respect and assurance of our cordial and sincere support.

Cleveland Convention Platform

McPherson, History of Reconstruction, p. 243. This convention was composed of Union soldiers and sailors who supported the administration. [September 17, 1866]

THE Union soldiers and sailors who served in the army and navy of the United States in the recent war for the suppression of the insurrection, the maintenance of the Constitution, the Government, and the flag of the Union, . . . determined now, as heretofore, to stand by the principles for which their glorious dead have fallen, and by which the survivors have triumphed, being assembled in National Mass Convention in the city of Cleveland, Ohio, . . . do resolve and declare—

1. That we heartily approve the resolutions adopted by the National Union Convention held in the city of Philadelphia, . . . composed of delegates representing all the States and Territories of the United States.

2. That our object in taking up arms to suppress the late rebellion was to defend and maintain the Constitution, and to preserve the Union with all the dignity, equality, and rights of the several States unimpaired, and not in any spirit of oppression, nor for any purpose of conquest and subjugation; and that whenever there shall be any armed resistance to the lawfully constituted authorities of our national Union, either in the South or in the North, in the East or in the West, emulating the self sacrificing patriotism of our revolutionary forefathers, we will again pledge to its support "our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor."

Pittsburg Convention Resolutions

McPherson, History of Reconstruction, p. 247. These resolutions were introduced by Gen. B. F. Butler and adopted by the Soldiers and Sailors Convention at Pittsburg. [September 26, 1866]

RESOLVED, That the action of the present Congress in passing the pending constitutional amendment is wise, prudent, just. It clearly defines American citizenship, and guarantees all his rights to every citizen. It places on a just and equal basis the right of representation, making the vote of a man in one State equally potent with the vote of another man in any State. It righteously excludes from places of honor and trust the chief conspirators, guiltiest rebels, whose perjured crimes have drenched the land in fraternal blood. It puts into the very frame of our government the inviolability of the national debt and the nullity forever of all obligations contracted in support of the rebellion.

2. That it is unfortunate for the country that these propositions have not been received in the spirit of conciliation, clemency, and fraternal feeling in which they were offered, as they are the mildest terms ever offered to subdued rebels.

3. That the President, as an executive officer, has no right to a policy as against the legislative department of the Government; that his attempt to fasten his scheme of reconstruction upon the country is as dangerous as it is unwise; his acts in sustaining it have retarded the restoration of peace and unity; they have converted conquered rebels into impudent claimants to rights which they have forfeited, and places which they have desecrated. If consummated, it would render the sacrifices of the nation useless, the loss of the lives of our buried comrades vain, and the war in which we have so gloriously triumphed, what his present friends at Chicago in 1864 declared to be a failure.

4. That the right of the conqueror to legislate for the conquered has been recognized by the public law of all civilized nations; by the operation of that law for the conservation of the good of the whole country, Congress has the undoubted right to establish measures for the conduct of the revolted States, and to pass all acts of legislation that are necessary for the complete restoration of the Union.

5. That when the President claims that by the aid of the army and navy he might have made himself dictator, he insulted every soldier and sailor in the Republic. He ought distinctly to understand that the tried patriots of this nation can never be used to overthrow civil liberty or popular government. . . .

7. That the Union men of the South, without distinction of race or color, are entitled to the gratitude of every loyal soldier and sailor who served his country in suppressing the rebellion, and that in their present dark hours of trial, when they are being persecuted by thousands, solely because they are now, and have been, true to the Government, we will not prove recreant to our obligations, but will stand by and protect with our lives, if necessary, those brave men who remain true to us when all around are false and faithless.

President Johnson's Cleveland Speech

Trial of Andrew Johnson, vol. i, pp. 333-335. The Cleveland Herald
(Johnson paper) version. [September 3, 1866]

FELLOW-CITIZENS OF CLEVELAND: It is not for the purpose of making a speech that I came here to-night. I am aware of the great curiosity that exists on the part of strangers in reference to seeing individuals who are here amongst us. [Louder.] You must remember there are a good many people here to-night, and it requires a great voice to reach the utmost verge of this vast audience. I have used my voice so constantly for some days past that I do not know as I shall be able to make you all hear, but I will do my best to make myself heard.

What I am going to say is: There is a large number here who would like to see General Grant, and hear him speak, and hear what he would have to say; but the fact is General Grant is not here. He is extremely ill. His health will not permit of his appearing before this audience to-night. It would be a greater pleasure to me to see him here and have him speak than to make a speech of my own. So then it will not be expected that he will be here to-night, and you cannot see him on account of his extreme indisposition.

Fellow-citizens, in being before you to-night it is not for the purpose of making a speech, but simply to make your acquaintance, and while I am telling you how to do, and at the same time tell you good-bye. We are here to-night on our tour towards a sister State for the purpose of participating in and witnessing the laying of the chief corner stone over a monument to one of our fellow-citizens who is no more. It is not necessary for me to mention the name of Stephen A. Douglas to the citizens of Ohio. It is a name familiar to you all, and being on a tour to participate in the ceremonies, and passing through your State and section of country and witnessing the demonstration and manifestation of regard and respect which has been paid me, I am free to say to you that so far as I am concerned, and I think I am speaking for all the company, when I say we feel extremely gratified and flattered at the demonstration made by the country through which we have passed, and in being flattered, I want to state at the same time that I don't consider that entirely personal, but as evidence of what is pervading the public mind, that there is a greater issue before the country, and that this demonstration of feeling is more than anything else an indication of a deep interest among the great mass of the people in regard to all these great questions that agitate the public mind. In coming before you to-night, I come before you as an American citizen, and not simply as your Chief Magistrate. I claim to be a citizen of the southern States, and an inhabitant of one of the States of this Union. I know that it has been said, and contended for on the part of some, that I was an alien, for I did not reside in any one of the States of the Union, and therefore I could not be Chief Magistrate, though the States declared I was.

But all that was necessary was simply to introduce a resolution declaring the office vacant or depose the occupant, or under some pretext to prefer articles of impeachment, and the individual who occupies the Chief Magistracy would be deposed and deprived of power.

But, fellow-citizens, a short time since you had a ticket before you for the Presidency and Vice-Presidency; I was placed upon that ticket, in conjunction with a distinguished fellow-citizen who is now no more. [Voice, "A great misfortune too."] I know there are some who will exclaim, "Unfortunate." I admit the ways of Providence are mysterious and unfortunate but uncontrollable by those who would exclaim unfortunate. I was going to say, my countrymen, but a short time since I was selected and placed upon a ticket. There was a platform prepared and adopted by those who placed me upon it, and now, notwithstanding all kinds of misrepresentation; notwithstanding since after the sluice of misrepresentation has been poured out; notwithstanding a subsidized gang of hirelings have tra-duced me and maligned me ever since I have entered upon the discharge of my official duties, yet I will say had my predecessor have lived, the vials of wrath would have been poured out on him. [Cries of "Never, never, never."] I come here to-night in passing along, and being called upon, for the purpose of exchanging opinions and views as time would permit, and to ascertain if we could who was in the wrong.

I appear before you to-night and I want to say this: that I have lived and been among all American people, and have represented them in some capacity for the last twenty-five years. And where is the man living, or the woman in the community, that I have wronged, or where is the person that can place their finger upon one single hairbreadth of deviation from one single pledge I have made, or one single violation of the Constitution of our country? What tongue does he speak? What religion does he profess? Let him come forward and place his finger upon one pledge I have violated. [A voice, "Hang Jeff Davis."] [Mr. President resumes.] Hang Jeff Davis? Hang Jeff Davis? Why don't you? [Applause.] Why don't you? [Applause.] Have you not got the court? Have you not got the court? Have you not got the Attorney General? Who is your Chief Justice, and that refused to sit upon the trial? [Applause.] I am not the prosecuting attorney. I am not the jury. But I will tell you what I did do; I called your Congress that is trying to break up the government. [Immense applause.] Yes, did your Congress order hanging Jeff Davis? [Prolonged applause, mingled with hisses].

But, fellow-citizens, we had as well let feelings and prejudices pass; let passion subside; let reason resume her empire. In representing myself to you in the few remarks I intended to make, my intention was to address myself to your judgment and to your good sense, and not to your anger or the malignity of your hearts. This was my object in presenting myself on this occasion, and at the same time to tell you good-bye. I have heard the remark made in this crowd to-night, "Traitor, traitor!" [Prolonged confusion.] My countrymen, will you hear me for my cause? For the Constitution of my country? I want to know when, where and under what circumstances Andrew Johnson, either as Chief Executive, or in any other capacity, ever violated the Constitution of his country. Let me ask this large and intelligent audience here to-night, if your Secretary of State, who served four years under Mr. Lincoln, who was placed under the butcher's blow and exposed to the assassin's knife, when he turned traitor. If I were disposed to play orator, and deal in declamation, here to-night, I would imitate one of the ancient tragedies we have such account of — I would take William H. Seward, and open to you the scars he has received. I would exhibit his bloody garment and show the rent caused by the assassin's knife. [Three cheers for Seward.] Yes, I would unfold his bloody garments here to-night and ask who had committed treason. I would ask why Jeff Davis was not hung? Why don't you hang Thad. Stevens and Wendell Phillips? I can tell you, my countrymen, I have been fighting traitors in the south, [prolonged applause,] and they have been whipped, and say they were wrong, acknowledge their error and accept the terms of the Constitution.

And now as I pass around the circle, having fought traitors at the south, I am prepared to fight traitors at the north. God being willing with your help ["You can't have it," and prolonged confusion] they would be crushed worse than the traitors of the south, and this glorious Union of ours will be preserved. In coming here to-night, it was not coming as Chief Magistrate of twenty-five States, but I come here as the Chief Magistrate of thirty-six States. I came here to-night with the flag of my country in my hand, with a constellation of thirty-six and not twenty-five stars. I came here to-night with the Constitution of my country intact, determined to defend the Constitution let the consequences be what they may. I came here to-night for the Union; the entire circle of these States. [A voice, "How many States made you President?"] How many States made me President? Was you against secession? Do you want to dissolve the Union? [A voice, "No."] Then I am President of the whole United States, and I will tell you one thing. I understand the discordant notes in this audience here to-night. And I will tell you, furthermore, that he that is opposed to the restoration of the government and the Union of the States, is as great a traitor as Jeff. Davis, and I am against both of them. I fought traitors at the south; now I fight them at the north. [Immense applause.]

I will tell you another thing; I know all about those boys that have fought for their country. I have been with them down there when cities were besieged. I know who was with them when some of you, that talk about traitors, had not courage to come out of your closets, but persuaded somebody else to go.

Very courageous men! While Grant, Sherman, Farragut, and a long host of the distinguished sons of the United States were in the field of battle you were cowards at home; and now when these brave men have returned, many of them having left an arm or leg on some battle-field while you were at home speculating and committing frauds upon your government, you pretend now to have great respect and sympathy for the poor fellow who left his arm on the battle-field. I understand you, who talk about the duty of the President, and object to his speech of the 22d of July, [voice, "22d of February,"] — 22d of February. I know who have fought the battles of the country, and I know who is to pay for it. Those brave men shed their blood and you speculated, got money, and now the great mass of the people must work it out. [Applause and confusion.] I care not for your prejudices. It is time for the great mass of the American people to understand what your designs are in not admitting the Southern States when they have come to terms and even proposed to pay their part of the national debt. I say, let them come; and those brave men, having conquered them, and having prostrated them in the dust with the heel of power upon them, what do they say? [Voice, "What does General Butler say?"] General Butler? What does General Grant say? And what does General Grant say of General Butler? What does General Sherman say? He says he is for restoration of the government: and General Sherman fought for it.

But fellow-citizens, let this all pass. I care not for malignity. There is a certain portion of our countrymen that will respect their fellow-citizen whenever he is entitled to respect, and there is another portion that have no respect for themselves, and consequently have none for anybody else. I know a gentleman when I see him. And furthermore, I know when I look a man in the face — [Voice, "Which you can't do."] I wish I could see you; I will bet now, if there could be a light reflected upon your face, that cowardice and treachery could be seen in it. Show yourself. Come out here where we can see you. If ever you shoot a man, you will stand in the dark and pull your trigger. I understand traitors; I have been fighting them for five years. We fought it out on the southern end of the line; now we are fighting in the other direction. And those men — such a one as insulted me to-night — you may say, has ceased to be a man, and in ceasing to be a man shrunk into the denomination of a reptile, and having so shrunk, as an honest man, I tread upon him. I came here to-night not to criminate or recriminate, but when provoked my nature is not to advance but to defend, and when encroached upon, I care not from what quarter it comes, it will find resistance, and resistance at the threshold. As your Chief Magistrate I have felt, after taking an oath to support the Constitution of my country, that I saw the encroachment of the enemy upon your sovereign rights. I saw the citadel of liberty intrenched upon and, as an honest man, being placed there as a sentinel, I have dared to sound the tocsin of alarm. Should I have ears and not hear: have a tongue and not speak when the enemy approaches?

And let me say to-night that my head has been threatened. It has been said that my blood was to be shed. Let me say to those who are still willing to sacrifice my life [derisive laughter and cheers], if you want a victim and my country requires it, erect your altar, and the individual who addresses you tonight, while here a visitor, ["No," "No," and laughter.]

erect your altar if you still thirst for blood, and if you want it, take out the individual who now addresses you and lay him upon your altar, and the blood that now courses his veins and warms his existence shall be poured out as a last libation to Freedom. I love my country, and I defy any man to put his finger upon anything to the contrary. Then what is my offence? [Voices, "You ain't a radical," "New Orleans," "Veto."] Somebody says "Veto." Veto of what? What is called the Freedmen's Bureau bill, and in fine, not to go into any argument here to-night, if you do not understand what the Freedmen's Bureau bill is, I can tell you. [Voice, "Tell us."] Before the rebellion there were 4,000,000 called colored persons held as slaves by about 340,000 people living in the South. That is, 340,000 slave owners paid expenses, bought land, and worked the negroes, and at the expiration of the year when cotton, tobacco, and rice were gathered and sold, after all paying expenses, these slave owners put the money in their pockets — [slight interruption] — your attention — they put the property in their pocket. In many instances there was no profit, and many came out in debt. Well that is the way things stood before the rebellion. The rebellion commenced and the slaves were turned loose. Then we come to the Freedmen's Bureau bill. And what did the bill propose? It proposed to appoint agents and sub-agents in all the cities, counties, school districts, and parishes, with power to make contracts for all the slaves, power to control, and power to hire them out — dispose of them, and in addition to that the whole military power of the government applied to carry it into execution.

Now [clamor and confusion] I never feared clamor. I have never been afraid of the people, for by them I have always been sustained. And when I have all the truth, argument, fact and reason on my side, clamor nor affront, nor animosities can drive me from my purpose.

Now to the Freedmen's Bureau. What was it? Four million slaves were emancipated and given an equal chance and fair start to make their own support — to work and produce; and having worked and produced, to have their own property and apply it to their own support. But the Freedmen's Bureau comes and says we must take charge of these 4,000,000 slaves. The bureau comes along and proposes, at an expense of a fraction less than $12,000,000 a year, to take charge of these slaves. You had already expended $3,000,000,000 to set them free and give them a fair opportunity to take care of themselves — then these gentlemen, who are such great friends of the people, tell us they must be taxed $12,000,000 to sustain the Freedmen's Bureau. [Great confusion.] I would rather speak to 500 men that would give me their attention than to 100,000 that would not. [With all this mass of patronage he said he could have declared himself dictator.]

The Civil Rights bill was more enormous than the other. I have exercised the veto power, they say. Let me say to you of the threats from your Stevenses, Sumners, Phillipeses, and all that class, I care not for them. As they once talked about forming a "league with hell and a covenant with the devil," I tell you, my countrymen, here to-night, though the power of hell, death and Stevens with all his powers combined, there is no power that can control me save you the people and the God that spoke me into existence. In bidding you farewell here to-night, I would ask you with all the pains Congress has taken to calumniate and malign me, what has Congress done? Has it done anything to restore the Union of the States? But, on the contrary, has it not done everything to prevent it?

And because I stand now as I did when the rebellion commenced, I have been denounced as a traitor. My countrymen here to-night, who has suffered more than I? Who has run greater risk? Who has borne more than I? But Congress, factious, domineering, tyrannical Congress has undertaken to poison the minds of the American people, and create a feeling against me in consequence of the manner in which I have distributed the public patronage.

While this gang — this common gang of cormorants and bloodsuckers, have been fattening upon the country for the past four or five years — men never going into the field, who growl at being removed from their fat offices, they are great patriots! Look at them all over your district? Everybody is a traitor that is against them. I think the time has come when those who stayed at home and enjoyed fat offices for the last four or five years — I think it would be more than right for them to give way and let others participate in the benefits of office. Hence you can see why it is that I am traduced and assaulted. I stood by these men who were in the field, and I stand by them now.

I have been drawn into this long speech, while I intended simply to make acknowledgments for the cordial welcome; but if I am insulted while civilities are going on I will resent it in a proper manner, and in parting here to-night I have no anger nor revengeful feelings to gratify. All I want now, peace has come and the war is over, is for all patriotic men to rally round the standard of their country, and swear by their altars and their God, that all shall sink together but what this Union shall be supported. Then in parting with you to-night, I hang over you this flag, not of 25 but of 36 stars; I hand over to you the Constitution of my country, though imprisoned, though breaches have been made upon it, with confidence hoping that you will repair the breaches; I hand it over to you, in whom I have always trusted and relied, and, so far, I have never deserted — and I feel confident, while speaking here to-night, for heart responds to heart of man, that you agree to the same great doctrine.

Then farewell! The little ill-feelings aroused here to-night — for some men have felt a little ill — let us not cherish them. Let me say, in this connection, there are many white people in this country that need emancipation. Let the work of emancipation go on. Let white men stand erect and free. [A voice, "What about New Orleans?"] You complain of the disfranchisement of the negroes in the southern States, while you would not give them the right of suffrage in Ohio to-day. Let your negroes vote in Ohio before you talk about negroes voting. Take the beam out of your own eye before you see the mote in your neighbor's eye. You are very much disturbed about New Orleans; but you will not allow the negro to vote in Ohio. . . .

This is all plain; we understand this all. And in parting with you to-night, let me invoke the blessing of God upon you, expressing my sincere thanks for the cordial manner in which you have received me.

6. POLITICS IN THE SOUTH, 1866

The Politics of the Southern Soldiers

Annual Cyclopaedia, 1866, p. 759. Resolutions adopted by a convention of soldiers at Memphis. [1866]

Whereas, a convention of the Union Soldiers and Sailors, are now in session in the city of Cleveland, Ohio, having under consideration the best mode in which to restore the Union of these States and to cement that bond of fraternal friendships so sundered by the late war; and

Whereas, we, the soldiers of the late army of the Confederate States feeling and being in sympathy with the movement of our late adversaries to restore our country to its former state of peace, happiness, and prosperity; and

Whereas, we believe that our stern advocacy of the principle for which we conscientiously struggled during a period of four years will be rather a recommendation of our sincerity, and honorable purposes to the brave soldiers of the Union; therefore,

Resolved, That we have seen with pleasure the movements made by the soldiers and sailors of the Union, for the preservation of which they have so long fought; and that we have no fears that wrong or injustice will be done to us by those we have learned on the battle-field to respect as "foemen worthy of our steel." . . .

We tender to them a soldier's pledge of our fidelity to the Government, of our assistance in the maintenance of law and order, and our earnest desire for the return of that day when the American people can say with truth they "know no North, no South, no East, and no West." . . .

The charge that the life, liberty, or property of Northern men is unsafe or unprotected in the South is a slander which could only have emanated from the cowardly fears of "fire-side heroes," or from the corrupt machinations of reckless office-holders, grown desperate at the approach of retributive justice, and the loss of power and place.

The Louisiana Democratic Platform

[October 2, 1865]

Whereas, The National Democratic party of the State of Louisiana, in general convention assembled, fully recognizing the fact of the issue, . . . was made openly, manfully, and honorably, and that the decision having gone against them, and,

Whereas, We have now come forward in the same spirit of frankness and honor to support the Federal Government under the Constitution. Therefore,

Resolved, That we give our unqualified adhesion to the National Democracy of the United States, and that we recognize that party as the only agent by which radicalism can be successfully met, and this Government restored to its pristine purity and vigor.

Resolved, That we emphatically approve of the views of President Johnson with regard to the reorganization of the State Governments of the South, whereby the rights of the respective States are kept unimpaired, and in consequence of which these States are to regulate their institutions as freely and with the same guarantees and privileges as are enjoyed by any other State in the Union. . . .

Resolved, That we hold this to be a Government of white people, made and to be perpetuated for the exclusive benefit of the white race; and in accordance with the constant adjudication of the United States Supreme Court, that people of African descent cannot be considered as citizens of the United States, and that there can, in no event, nor under any circumstances, be any equality between the white and other races.

Resolved, That while we announce emphatically our opinion that the Constitution of 1864 is the creation of fraud, violence, and corruption, and is not in any sense the expression of the sovereign will of the people of Louisiana, and while we believe that it should be repudiated and abolished as speedily as it can be done legally, yet, as the Government organized under it is a de facto Government, and the only de facto Government in the State of Louisiana; as the election about to be held is called under that Constitution, by an officer holding his position under that Constitution; as the recognition of Governor J. Madison Wells by the President, Andrew Johnson, is to that extent a recognition of that Constitution and of the Government organized under it, and as this convention has no right to make or alter Constitutions or forms of government, we, therefore, recognize it as the existing Government, but recommend the calling of a convention of the people of the State at the earliest practicable period, for the purpose of adopting a Constitution expressing the will of the entire people of the State.

Resolved, That the institution of slavery having been effectually abolished in the Southern States, we consider it our right to petition Congress for compensation for all losses sustained by the emancipation policy. . .

Resolved, That we advocate the repeal of all ordinances and laws found to have been passed in Louisiana, and which are not in harmony with the Constitution and laws of the General Government, and which are not the deed of bodies constituted by the people at large. . .

We most earnestly and strongly appeal for an early general amnesty and prompt restitution of property; assured that thereby impending total ruin will be averted and the domestic tranquility of the Southern States successfully insured.

Resolved, That we invite all law-abiding citizens who agree with us upon the measures and principles above enumerated, without distinction of nationalities, to join us in our opposition to the Radical Republican party, whose tendency and aim are to centralize and consolidate a Government on the ruins of our State institutions.

Radical Politics in Virginia

Annual Cyclopaedia, 1866, p. 766. Resolutions adopted by the Republican State Convention. [May, 1866]

Resolved, That no reorganized State Government of Virginia should be recognized by the Government of the United States which does not exclude from suffrage and holding office, at least for a term of years, all persons who have voluntarily given moral or material support to rebellion against the United States, and which does not, with such disfranchisement, provide for the immediate enfranchisement of all Union men, without distinction of color. . .

Resolved, That while the late rebels affect to accept the situation, they not only hold the same opinion still in regard to [Secession], but openly advocate their views in that respect as a basis of party action in the future, as we believe for the purpose of accomplishing with votes what they have failed to accomplish with bayonets.

Speeches of a Radical Agitator

Annual Cyclopaedia, 1866. pp. 451, 454. Speeches of Dr. Dostie, a radical leader of New Orleans. Dostie was killed in the riot that followed the re-assembling of the Convention of 1864. [January, 1866]

HE congratulated the people that the gigantic rebellion was crushed; that its leaders languished in prison, and that the country was restored to its former tranquillity, minus slavery and sectional feeling. The progressive age demanded the overthrow of a Southern aristocracy in the liberation of four millions of people, and the best blood of the land purchased it. . . They would be compelled to quit their political heresies as they had quitted the field. The Republican party could not endure to lose the precious boon of liberty at the hands of what is left of an insolent aristocracy. They stand upon the broad platform of an equality of rights. It is said that negro suffrage is impracticable owing to the ignorance of the race. The speaker went on to show how rapidly they were being educated, and with what avidity they sought after knowledge. . . In our beloved land, we have our Banks and our Butlers, and a hundred others, all worshippers at the altar of liberty and universal suffrage. The same is the opinion entertained by all great men abroad. In Brazil, in Jamaica, and the French West Indies, all free persons of whatever color, are allowed to vote. In five New England States negroes have been voting since the Revolutionary War. George Washington cast his ballot in the same box with a colored man. Thirty years ago in nearly every State colored men had a right to vote. . .

I want the negroes to have the right of suffrage, and we will give them this right to vote. There will be another meeting here to-morrow night, and on Monday I want you to come in your power. I want no cowards to come. I want only brave men to come, who will stand by us, and we will stand by them. Come, then, in your power to that meeting, or never go to another political meeting in this State. We have three hundred thousand black men with white hearts. Also one hundred thousand good and true Union white men, who will fight for and beside the black race against the hell-hound rebels, for now there are but two parties here. There are no copperheads now. Colonel Field, now making a speech inside, is heart and soul with us. He and others who would not a year ago speak to me, now take me by the hand. We are four hundred thousand to three hundred thousand, and can not only whip but exterminate the other party. Judge Abel with his grand jury may indict us. Harry Hayes, with his posse comitatus, may be expected there, and the police, with more than a thousand men sworn in, may interfere with the convention; therefore let all brave men, and not cowards, come here on Monday. There will be no such puerile affair as at Memphis, but, if interfered with, the streets of New Orleans will run with blood! The rebels say they have submitted and accept the situation, but want you to do the work and they will do the voting; and will you throw over them "the mantle of charity and oblivion?"

"We will! We will!" was the unanimous response of the excited throng, to which Dr. Dostie vehemently replied:

"No, by God! we won't. We are bound to have universal suffrage, though you have the traitor, Andrew Johnson, against you."

A Negro Politician in Florida

John Wallace, Carpet Bag Rule in Florida, p. 38. Wallace was a negro representative from Leon County in the Florida senate.
[1866]

EARLY in 1866 it was reported that the freedmen would be enfranchised, and many of them thinking the right had already occurred, called a secret meeting for the election of a member of Congress. The meeting was held at the A. M. E. Church in Tallahassee, and Joseph Oats, formerly a slave of Governor Walker, was unanimously elected. The next step was to raise money to send the newly elected Congressman to Washington. The money was forthcoming, as plenty of old men and women gave their last dollar to send one of their race to the National Congress. Seven hundred dollars were thus raised and given to Oats, who shortly afterwards was off to Congress. He remained away from Tallahassee until his money was gone, when he wrote back designating the time when he would return. . . The 20th of May, the day on which General McCook marched his troops into Tallahassee, and declared all the inhabitants to be free, was the day set apart for Oats to tell the freedmen the great work he had accomplished in Congress. . . Oats' speech was, that he had seen the President, and they had true friends at Washington etc. It was believed, however, that Oats did not go further than Savannah, where he had a good time, spent the freedmen's money, and returned home. After Oats had finished his story about the President, and his great labors in Congress the crowd set up their huzzas for half an hour and then sat down to a sumptuous dinner. Whisky was plentiful on the ground and was freely imbibed by the freedmen. A dispute arose among them as to where Oats had been. And the affair ended in a general knock down and drag out.

7. REJECTION OF THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT

Alexander H. Stephens on the Conditions of Reconstruction

Report of Joint Committee on Reconstruction. pt. iii, p. 163. Stephens was Vice-President of the Confederate States. [1866]

I THINK the people of the State would be unwilling to do more than they have done for restoration. Restricted or limited suffrage would not be so objectionable as general or universal. But it is a matter that belongs to the State to regulate. The question of suffrage, whether universal or restricted, is one of State policy exclusively, as they believe. Individually I should not be opposed to a proper system of restricted or limited suffrage to this class of our population. . . The only view in their opinion that could possibly justify the war that was carried on by the federal government against them was the idea of the indissolubleness of the Union; that those who held the administration for the time were bound to enforce the execution of the laws and the maintenance of the integrity of the country under the Constitution. . . They expected as soon as the confederate cause was abandoned that immediately the states would be brought back into their practical relations with the government as previously constituted. They expected that the States would immediately have their representatives in the Senate and in the House; and they expected in good faith, as loyal men, as the term is frequently used — loyal to law, order, and the Constitution — to support the government under the Constitution. . . Towards the Constitution of the United States the great mass of our people were always as much devoted in their feelings as any people ever were towards any laws or people. . . They resorted to secession with a view of more securely maintaining these principles. And when they found they were not successful in their object in perfect good faith, as far as I can judge from meeting with them and conversing with them, looking to the future development of their country, . . . their earnest desire and expectation was to allow the past struggle . . . to pass by and to co-operate with . . . those of all sections who earnestly desire the preservation of constitutional liberty and the perpetuation of the government in its purity. They have been . . . disappointed in this, and are . . . patiently waiting, however, and believing that when the passions of the hour have passed away this delay in representation will cease. . . .

My own opinion is that these terms ought not to be offered as conditions precedent. . . . It would be best for the peace, harmony, and prosperity of the whole country that there should be an immediate restoration, an immediate bringing back of the States into their original practical relations; and let all these questions then be discussed in common council. Then the representatives from the south could be heard, and you and all could judge much better of the tone and temper of the people than you could from the opinions given by any individuals. . . . My judgment, therefore, is very decided, that it would have been better as soon as the lamentable conflict was over, when the people of the south abandoned their cause and agreed to accept the issue, desiring as they do to resume their places for the future in the Union, and to look to the arena of reason and justice for the protection of their rights in the Union — it would have been better to have allowed that result to take place, to follow under the policy adopted by the administration, than to delay or hinder it by propositions to amend the Constitution in respect to suffrage. . . . I think the people of all the southern States would in the halls of Congress discuss these questions calmly and deliberately, and if they did not show that the views they entertained were just and proper, such as to control the judgment of the people of the other sections and States, they would quietly . . . yield to whatever should be constitutionally determined in common council. . . . They feel very sensitively the offer to them of propositions to accept while they are denied all voice . . . in the discussion of these propositions. . . . They feel very sensitively that they are denied the right to be heard.

The Fourteenth Amendment Rejected in Florida

Annual Cyclopaedia, 1866, p. 326. Report of a Committee of the legislature. [1866]

As the representatives of the people of the State of Florida, we protest that we are willing to make any organic changes of a thoroughly general character, and which do not totally destroy the nature of the government. We are willing to do anything which a generous conqueror even should demand. . . . On the other hand, we will bear any ill before we will pronounce our own dishonor. We will be taxed without representation; we will quietly endure the government of the bayonet; we will see and submit to the threatened fire and sword and destruction, but we will not bring, as a peace offering, the conclusive evidence of our own self-created degradation.

Our present relations with the general government are certainly of a strange character. Beyond the postal service, our people derive no benefit from our existence as a State in the Union. We are denied representation. . . . We are at the same time subject to the most onerous taxation; the civil law of the State is enforced and obeyed only when it meets the approval of the local commander of the troops of the United States; the Congress of the United States enacts laws making certain lands subject to entry at a small cost by the colored portion of our population, and denies the like privilege to the white man. . . .

We are, in fact, recognized as a State for the single and sole purpose of working out our own destruction and dishonor. . . . We are recognized as a State for the highest purposes known to the Constitution, namely, its amendment; but we are not recognized as a State for any of the benefits resulting from that relation.

Arkansas Rejects the Fourteenth Amendment

Annual Cyclopaedia, 1866, p. 27. Resolution of the legislature. [December 10, 1866]

1. It is not known, nor can it be, to the State of Arkansas, that the proposed amendment was ever acted upon by a Congress of such a character as is provided for by the Constitution, inasmuch as nearly one-third of the States were refused representation in the Congress which acted upon this amendment.

2. This proposed amendment was never submitted to the President for his sanction, as it should have been, according to the very letter of that Constitution under which Congress exists. . .

3. The great and enormous power sought to be conferred on Congress by the amendment, by giving to that body authority to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of the first article of said amendment, would, in effect, take from the States all control over their local and domestic concerns, and virtually abolish the States.

4. The second section seems, to the committee, an effort to force negro suffrage upon the States; and whether intended or not, it leaves the power to bring this about, whether the States consent or not; and the committee are of the opinion that every State Legislature should shrink from ever permitting the possibility of such a calamity.

5. The third section, as an act of disfranchisement which would embrace many of our best and wisest citizens, must, of necessity, be rejected by the people of Arkansas.

The President Opposes the Fourteenth Amendment

Trial of Andrew Johnson, vol. i, p. 271. The Alabama legislature after having rejected the Fourteenth Amendment was reconsidering it. The first telegram below was sent to the President from Montgomery by ex-Governor L. E. Parsons. The second telegram contains the reply which resulted in the defeat of the amendment.

[January 17, 1867]

[1]. Legislature in session. Efforts making to reconsider vote on constitutional amendments. Report from Washington says it is probable an enabling act will pass. We do not know what to believe. I find nothing here.

[2]. What possible good can be obtained by reconsidering the constitutional amendment? I know of none in the present posture of affairs; and I do not believe the people of the whole country will sustain any set of individuals in attempts to change the whole character of our government by enabling acts or otherwise. I believe, on the contrary, that they will eventually uphold all who have patriotism and courage to stand by the Constitution, and who place their confidence in the people. There should be no faltering on the part of those who are honest in their determination to sustain the several coördinate departments of the government in accordance with its original design.

A Southern Proposal for a Fourteenth Amendment

Johnson MSS. After rejecting the amendment proposed by Congress there was a movement in the South to suggest a Fourteenth Amendment that would be acceptable to the whites. After correspondence between the states in 1866-67, there was a meeting of Southern governors in Washington on February 4, 1867, which drew up drafts for the proposed amendment. One of these is given below. The Reconstruction Acts a month later put a stop to this movement. [1866-1867]

Resolved, by the General Assembly of North Carolina, that with a view to compose our present political troubles, and effect a complete restoration of the State to her former [practical]¹ [constitutional]² relations with the government of the United States, the following propositions be submitted to the [Congress of the United States],² National Legislature, the State of North Carolina hereby pledging herself to their adoption, completely and unreservedly, upon an assurance that [upon her doing so]¹ [so soon as she shall have done so,]³ Senators and Representatives [of acknowledged allegiance to the Federal Government and]³ loyal to the Constitution of the United States shall be admitted to their seats by the respective Houses composing the Congress of the United States; and the State fully restored to all her [constitutional]³ relations as a member of the American Union. First, That the following article shall be adopted as an amendment to, and become a part of the Constitution of the State of North Carolina.

1. Words erased in original.

2. Words in pencil added by President Johnson.

3. Changes in red ink in same writing as draft.

ARTICLE —

Every male citizen, who has resided in this State for one year, and in the county in which he offers to vote six months immediately preceding the day of election, and who can read [the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States in the English language],² and write [his name],³ or who may be the owner of two hundred and fifty dollars worth of taxable property shall be entitled to vote at all elections for Governor of the State, members of the Legislature and all other officers, the election of whom [shall be with]¹ [may be by]³ the people of the State: . Provided that no person [by reason of this article shall be excluded from voting]³ who has heretofore exercised the [right of suffrage]¹ [elective franchise]³ under the Constitution [and laws]³ of this State, [shall be excluded therefrom by reason of this Article]¹ [or who at the time of the adoption of this amendment may be entitled to vote under said Constitution and laws.]³

Secondly. RACE AND LABOR PROBLEMS:
"BLACK CODES"

RACE AND LABOR PROBLEMS: "BLACK CODES"

INTRODUCTION

TO fix the position of four million emancipated blacks in the social order was one of the most important problems that confronted the Southern state governments in 1865, not only because of the inherent difficulties of the problem but because of the suspicious attitude of the victorious North, especially the radical politicians and the former abolitionists, toward the South in all things that concerned the negro.

Some kind of legislation for the freedmen was necessary in 1865-1866. The slave codes were obsolete; the few laws for the free negroes were not applicable to the present conditions; most laws and codes then in force were made expressly for whites. The task of the law makers was to express in the law the transition of the negroes from slavery to citizenship; to regulate family life, morals and conduct; to give the ex-slave the right to hold property, the right to personal protection, and the right to testify in courts; to provide for the aged and helpless and the orphans; to force the blacks to settle down, have homes, engage in some kind of work, and fulfill contracts; to provide for negro education which formerly had been forbidden; to prevent the exploitation of the ignorant blacks by unscrupulous persons, and to protect the whites in person and property from lawless blacks. In general the laws relating to whites were extended to the blacks, sometimes with slight modifications. But one principle was never lost sight of, viz., that the races were unlike and unequal and should be kept separate. It was believed that in some matters laws should not be uniform for the two races. The laws making distinction of race are the ones usually called the "Black Laws" or the "Black Code." The sources of these laws are found in the ante-bellum laws for free negroes, in the Northern and Southern vagrancy laws, in the freedmen's codes of the West Indies, in the Roman law on freedmen, in pure theory to some extent, and to a great degree in the regulations for blacks made by the United States army and Treasury officials in 1862-1865, and in the Freedmen's Bureau rules. Theoretically the control of the blacks by the army, the Treasury Department, and the Bureau was almost absolute and if carried out would have transferred the control of the slave from the master to the United States government. The laws passed by the states were much the same but from a different point of view.

From the Southern point of view these laws in no way limited any rights of the blacks. They were simply an extension of rights not before possessed. The slave codes were superseded by white men's laws. Some of the laws bore more heavily on whites, others on blacks. This was true especially of the laws relating to standing in court — where the black had the advantage of the white. Most of the laws usually called "Black Laws" make no distinction of races. As a rule the states that acted first in 1865 made the wider distinction between the races. The laws of 1866 bestow more privileges than those of 1865. This legislation was severely criticised by the Northern politicians and served as a convenient issue in the campaign of 1866. The criticisms were generally to the effect that the laws were meant to re-enslave the blacks. It is noteworthy that President Johnson did not at all appreciate the importance of this problem of negro legislation. He seemed to think that the destruction of slavery left nothing else to be done. The legislatures that passed these laws were composed mainly of men of little experience, non-slaveholders, who had been Unionists or luke-warm Confederates. This fact will account for much of the crudeness of the early legislation. The laws would have been more liberal, but the general principles would have been the same had the legislatures been composed of the experienced popular leaders who were then disfranchised. The laws were never in force in any of the states; the Freedmen's Bureau suspended them until 1868, when the reconstructed governments repealed them.

Since the downfall of the Reconstruction régime, the essential parts of this legislation have been re-enacted in the Southern states, especially the laws relating to definition of race, to the separation of the races in schools and in public conveyances, and to the prohibition of intermarriage of the races. The labor, contract, and vagrancy laws are about the same, though now applying to both races.

I. DISCUSSION OF RACE AND LABOR PROBLEMS

C. G. Memminger on Race and Labor Problems

Johnson MSS. C. G. Memminger, Flat Rock, South Carolina, to President Johnson. Memminger was Confederate Secretary of the Treasury. [September 4, 1865]

I TAKE it for granted that this whole Southern Country accepts emancipation from Slavery as the condition of the African race; but neither the North nor the South have yet defined what is included in that emancipation. The boundaries are widely apart which mark on the one side, political equality with the white races, and on the other, a simple recognition of personal liberty. With our own race, ages have intervened between the advance from one of these boundaries to the other. No other people have been able to make equal progress, and many have not yet lost sight of the original point of starting. Great Britain has made the nearest approach; Russia has just started; and the other nations of Europe, after ages of struggle, are yet on the way from the one point to the other, none of them having yet advanced even to the position attained by England. The question now pending is, as to the station in this wide interval which shall be assigned to the African race. Does that race possess qualities, or does it exhibit any peculiar fitness which will dispense with the training which our own race has undergone, and authorize us at once to advance them to equal rights? It seems to me that this point has been decided already by the laws of the free States. None of them have yet permitted equality, and the greater part assert this unfitness of the African by denying him any participation in political power.

The Country then seems prepared to assign to this race an inferior condition; but the precise nature of that condition is yet to be defined, and also the Government which shall regulate it. I observe that you have already decided . . . that the adjustment of the right of suffrage belongs to the State Governments, and should be left there. But this, as well as most of the other questions on this subject, rests upon the decision which shall be made upon the mode of organizing the labor of the African race. The Northern people seem generally to suppose that the simple emancipation from slavery will elevate the African to the condition of the white laboring classes; and that contracts and competition will secure the proper distribution of labor. They see, on the one hand, the owner of land, wanting laborers, and on the other, a multitude of landless laborers without employment; and they naturally conclude that the law of demand and supply will adjust the exchange in the same manner as it would do at the North. But they are not aware of the attending circumstances which will disappoint these calculations.

The laborer in the Southern States . . . occupies the houses of his employer, built upon plantations widely separate. The employment of a laborer involves the employment and support of his whole family. Should the employer be discontented with any laborers and desire to substitute others in their place, before he can effect that object, he must proceed to turn out the first with their entire families into the woods, so as to have houses for their successors. Then he must encounter the uncertainty and delay in procuring other laborers; and also the hostility of the laborers on his own plantation, which would probably exhibit itself in sympathy with the ejected families and combinations against himself. Should this occur at any critical period of the crop, its entire loss would ensue. Nor would his prospect of relief from other plantations be hopeful. On them arrangements will have been made for the year, and the abstraction of laborers from them would result in new disorganization. The employer would thus be wholly at the mercy of the laborer.

It may be asked why the laborer is more likely to fail in the performance of his contract than his employer. The reasons are obvious. The employer by the possession of property affords a guarantee by which the law can compel his performance. The laborer can offer no such guarantee, and nothing is left to control him but a sense of the obligation of the contract.

The force of this remedy depends upon the degree of conscientiousness and intelligence attained by the bulk of a people.

It is well known that one of the latest and most important fruits of civilization is a perception of the obligation of contracts. . . . It would be vain, under any circumstances, to count upon such performance from an ignorant and uneducated population. But where that population is from constitution or habit peculiarly subject to the vices of an inferior race, nothing short of years of education and training can bring about that state of moral rectitude and habitual self constraint which would secure the regular performance of contracts. In the present case, to these general causes must be added the natural indolence of the African race, and the belief now universal among them that they are released from any obligation to labor. Under these circumstances the employer would have so little inducement to risk his capital in the hands of the laborer, or to advance money for food and working animals in cultivating a crop which, when reaped, would be at the mercy of the laborers, that he will certainly endeavor to make other arrangements. The effect will be the abandonment of the negro to his indolent habits, and the probable relapse of large portions of the country into its original forest condition. The two races, instead of exchanging mutual good offices, will inflict mutual evil on each other; and the final result must be the destruction or removal of the inferior race.

The appropriate remedy for these evils evidently points to the necessity of training the inferior race; and we are naturally led to look to the means which would be employed by our own race for the same purpose. The African is virtually in condition of the youth, whose inexperience and want of skill unfit him for the privileges of manhood. He is subjected to the guidance and control of one better informed. He is bound as an apprentice to be trained and directed; and is under restraint until he is capable of discharging the duties of manhood.

Such, it seems to me, is the proper instrumentality which should now be applied to the African race. The vast body are substantially in a state of minority. They have been all their lives subject to the control and direction of another; and at present are wholly incapable of self-government. Alongside of them are their former masters, fully capable of guiding and instructing them, needing their labor, and not yet alienated from them in feeling. The great point to be obtained is the generous application by the one of his superior skill and resources, and their kindly reception by the other. This can be effected only by some relation of acknowledged dependence. Let the untrained and incapable African be placed under indentures of apprenticeship to his former master, under such regulations as will secure both parties from wrong; and whenever the apprentice shall have obtained the habits and knowledge requisite for discharging the duties of a citizen, let him then be advanced from youth to manhood and be placed in the exercise of a citizen's rights, and the enjoyment of the privileges attending such a change. . . .

The Laws passed by the British Parliament on this subject, for the West India Colonies . . . are founded upon this idea of apprenticeship. Such an adjustment of the relations of the two races would overcome many difficulties, and enable the emancipation experiment to be made under the most favorable circumstances. The experience of the British colonies would afford valuable means for improving the original plans; and no doubt the practical common sense of our people can, by amending their errors, devise the best possible solution of the problems, and afford the largest amount of good to the African race.

The only question which would remain would be as to the Government which should enact and administer these laws. Unquestionably the jurisdiction under the Constitution of the United States belongs to the States. This fact will most probably disincline the Congress to an early recognition of the Southern States upon their original footing under the Constitution, from the apprehension of harsh measures towards the former slaves. The difficulty would be obviated, if a satisfactory adjustment could be previously made of the footing upon which the two races are to stand. If by general agreement an apprentice system could be adopted in some form which would be satisfactory as well as obligatory, it seems to me that most of the evils now existing, or soon to arise, would be remedied; and that a fair start would be made in the proper direction. The details of the plan could be adjusted from the experience of the British Colonies; and if it should result in proving the capacity of the African race to stand upon the same platform with the white man, I doubt not but that the South will receive that conclusion with satisfaction fully equal to that of any other section.

The Negro Problem in Mississippi

Report of Joint Committee on Reconstruction, part iii, p. 182. Message of Gov. B. G. Humphreys to the legislature.

[November 20, 1865]

By the sudden emancipation of over three hundred thousand slaves, Mississippi has imposed upon her a problem of vast magnitude, upon the proper solution of which depends the hopes and future prosperity and welfare of ourselves and of our children.

Under the pressure of federal bayonets, urged on by the misdirected sympathies of the world in behalf of the enslaved African, the people of Mississippi have abolished the institution of slavery, and have solemnly declared in their State constitution that "the legislature should provide by law for the protection and security of person and property of the freedmen of the State, and guard them and the State against any evils that may arise from the sudden emancipation." . . . We must now meet the question as it is, and not as we would like to have it. The rule must be justice. The negro is free, whether we like it or not; we must realize that fact now and forever. To be free, however, does not make him a citizen, or entitle him to social or political equality with the white man. But the constitution and justice do entitle him to protection and security in his person and property. . . .

In my humble judgment, no person, bond or free, under any form of government, can be assured of protection or security in either person or property, except through an independent and enlightened judiciary. The courts, then, should be open to the negro. But of what avail is it to open the courts, and invite the negro to "sue and be sued," if he is not permitted to testify himself, and introduce such testimony as he or his attorney may deem essential to establish the truth and justice of his case? . . .

As a measure of domestic policy, whether for the protection of the person or the property of the freedman, or for the protection of society, the negro should be allowed and required to testify for or against the white and black. . . There are few men living in the south who have not known many white criminals to go "unwhipped of justice" because negro testimony was not permitted in the courts. And now that the negro is no longer under the restraints and protection of his master, he will become the dupe and the "cat's paw" of the vile and the vicious white man who seeks his association, and will plunder our lands with entire security from punishment, unless he can be reached through negro testimony. It is an insult to the intelligence and virtue of our courts, and juries of white men, to say or suspect that they can not or will not protect the innocent, whether white or black, against . . . any perjury of black witnesses.

The question of admitting negro testimony for the protection of their person and property sinks into insignificance by the side of the other great question of guarding them and the State against the evils that may arise from their sudden emancipation. What are the evils that have already arisen, against which we are to guard the negro and the State? The answer is patent to all — vagrancy and pauperism, and their inevitable concomitants, crime and misery, hang like a dark pall over a once prosperous and happy, but now desolate land.

To the guardian care of the Freedmen's Bureau has been entrusted the emancipated slaves. The civil law and the man outside of the Bureau have been deprived of all jurisdiction over them. . . Idleness and vagrancy have been the result. Our rich and productive fields have been deserted for the filthy garrets and sickly cellars of our towns and cities. From producers they are converted into consumers, and, as winter approaches, their only salvation from starvation and want is federal rations, plunder and pillage. Four years of cruel war conducted on principles of vandalism disgraceful to the civilization of the age, were scarcely more blighting and destructive on the homes of the white man, and impoverishing, degrading to the negro, than has resulted in the last six or eight months from the administration of this black incubus. Many of the officers connected with that bureau are gentlemen of honor and integrity, but they seem incapable of protecting the rights and property of the white man against the villanies of the vile and villanous with whom they are associated.

How long this hideous curse, permitted of Heaven, is to be allowed to rule and ruin our unhappy people, I regret it is not in my power to give any assurance, further than can be gathered from the public and private declarations of President Johnson, that "the troops will all be withdrawn from Mississippi, when, in the opinion of the government, the peace and order and civil authority has been restored, and can be maintained without them." In this uncertainty as to what will satisfy the government of our loyalty and ability to maintain order and peace and civil government, our duty under the Constitution to guard the negro and the State from the evils arising from sudden emancipation must not be neglected. Our duty to the State, and to the freedmen, seems to me to be clear, and I respectfully recommend — 1st. That negro testimony should be admitted in our courts, not only for the protection of person and property of freedmen, but for the protection of society against the crimes of both races. 2d. That the freedmen be encouraged at once to engage in some pursuit of industry for the support of his family and the education of his children, by laws assuring him of friendship and protection. Tax the freedmen for the support of the indigent and helpless freedmen, and then with an iron will and the strong hand of power take hold of the idler and the vagrant and force him to some profitable employment. 3d. Pass a militia law that will enable the militia to protect our people against the insurrection, or any possible combination of vicious white men and negroes.

Reasons for Admitting Negro Testimony

John Wallace, Carpet Bag Rule in Florida, p. 13. Message of Gov. William M. Marvin to the Convention of Florida. [October 25, 1865]

HERETOFORE, the negro in a condition of slavery, was to a large extent under the power and protection of his master, who felt an interest in his welfare, not only because he was a dependent . . . but because he was his property. Now he has no such protection, and unless he finds protection in the courts of justice he becomes the victim of every wicked, depraved and bad man, whose avarice may prompt him to refuse the payment of his just wages, and whose angry and revengeful passions may excite him to abuse and maltreat the helpless being placed by his freedom beyond the pale of protection of any kind. Much sensitiveness is felt in this and other Southern States upon the subject of the admissibility of negro testimony in courts of justice for or against white persons. . . Now that the negro is free, I do not feel any such sensitiveness. I do not perceive the philosophy or expediency of any rule of evidence which shuts out the truth from the hearing of the jury. It may be said that the intention of the rule is to shut out falsehood; but how can it be known to the jury whether the testimony be true or false until they have heard it and compared it with the other testimony in the case? The admission of negro testimony should not be regarded as a privilege granted to the negro, but as the right of the State, in all criminal prosecutions, to have his testimony . . . to assist to establish the guilt of the accused, and it ought, reciprocally, to be the right of the accused to have such testimony to establish his innocence. But the question of the admissibility of negro testimony is merely incidental to the main subject, which is the duty of the State to protect the negro in the exercise and enjoyment of his rights of freedom. . . If the colored race in this country can be fully and fairly protected in the exercise and enjoyment of their newly acquired rights of freedom, then, in my judgment, they will be a quiet and contented people, unambitious of any political privileges, or of any participation in the affairs of the government. Protected in their persons and property, they may be stimulated to be industrious and economical by a desire to acquire property in order to educate themselves and their children, and improve their physical, moral and intellectual condition. . . We may reasonably hope and believe that they will progress and improve in intelligence and civilization, and become . . . the best free agricultural peasantry, for our soil and climate, that the world has ever seen.

Labor Problems in Florida

Report of Joint Committee on Reconstruction, part iv, p. 12. Address of outgoing Governor Marvin. [December 20, 1865]

IT appears to me that, by wise legislation and a just and impartial administration and enforcement of the laws which shall protect and secure all persons alike, without distinction of color, in all their just rights of person and property, and which shall give an easy and cheap remedy to the laborer for the collection of his wages, much may be done toward restoring confidence and kind feelings between the employer and the employed, and encouraging the industry of the country. Let the laborer be protected against impositions upon his ignorance in making his contract, so that he shall fully understand it, and let him feel fully assured that he has an easy and cheap remedy in the courts of law for the recovery of his wages if they should be unjustly withheld from him, and many white and colored persons will be inclined to enter into contracts to labor, who would not otherwise do so. It is all-important to the successful cultivation of corn and cotton that the planter should be able to rely at all times upon having a sufficient number of hands in his service to make and gather the crop. . . He must hire his laborers by the year, and it seems to me that in the present condition of the laboring force of this country, it is all-important to the interest of the country that he should have some security that the laborer will not leave his employment at a time when his services are most needed. The ordinary remedies known to the common law for the non performance of a contract to labor afford him no security, for the laborer, as a general thing, has no goods or chattels, lands or tenements, to levy upon under an execution. . . What that remedy ought to be may tax the ingenuity of the legislature to devise, and perhaps it will only be learned by experience; but it appears to me that it would be wise for the legislature to provide, by law, that where the laborer has entered into a contract in writing before the judge of probate or a justice of the peace, to labor on a plantation for one year for wages or for a part of the crop, and the contract specifies the wages to be paid and the food to be given; that if the laborer abandons the service of his employer, or is absent therefrom two days without the leave of his employer, or fails without just cause in other important particulars to perform his part of the contract, that then he may be arrested by the proper tribunal, and, if found guilty on a hearing of the case, be sentenced to labor during the unexpired term, without pay, upon the highways, in a government workshop, or upon a government plantation. . .

Much may be done, too, to stimulate the industry of the country and protect it against pauperism, by passing wise laws upon the subject of vagrants and providing for their employment. . .

The old and infirm, who are destitute and incapable of supporting themselves by labor, ought to be supported at the public expense. It would be inhuman and anti-Christian to leave them to perish, so long as we have the ability to prevent it. "The poor ye have with you always," said our Saviour. They are his gift or legacy to us, for the trial of our faith and charity. Let us accept the gift with grateful hearts, and do what we can for their support and comfort.

There are many children in this State, white and black, who are deprived of their parents, one or both, or whose parents are incapable of supporting or educating them as they ought to be. These should be apprenticed until they are twenty-one years of age. The law on this subject ought to be carefully guarded, so as to protect the apprentice against injustice or oppression. It ought to provide that the apprentice should be produced, if living, at least once a year before the tribunal that binds him out, which should be authorized to revoke the articles of apprenticeship on account of any gross injustice or oppression of the master.

The Duty of the Whites to the Negroes

Report of Joint Committee on Reconstruction, part iv, p. 16. Inaugural address of Gov. D. S. Walker of Florida. [December 20, 1865]

I THINK we are bound by every consideration of duty, gratitude, and interest, to make these people as enlightened, prosperous, and happy as their new situation will admit. . . They have been attached to our persons and our fortunes, sharing with us all our feelings — rejoicing with us in our prosperity, mourning with us in our adversity. . . Not only in peace, but in war, they have been faithful to us. . . Our females and infant children [were left] almost exclusively to the protection of our slaves. They proved true to their trust. Not one instance of insult, outrage, or indignity has ever come to my knowledge. They remained at home and made provisions for our army. Many of them went with our sons to the army, and there, too, proved their fidelity, attending them when well, nursing them and caring for them when sick and wounded. We all know that many of them were willing, and some of them anxious, to take up arms in our cause. Although for several years within sound of the guns of the vessels of the United States for six hundred miles along our seaboard, yet scarcely one in a thousand left our . . . service to take shelter and freedom under the flag of the Union. It is not their fault they are free; they had nothing to do with it; that was brought about by “the results and operations of the war.”

But they are free. They are no longer our contented and happy slaves, with an abundant supply of food and clothing for themselves and families, and the intelligence of a superior race to look ahead and make all necessary arrangements for their comfort. They are now a discontented and unhappy people, many of them houseless and homeless, roaming about in gangs over the land, not knowing one day where the supplies for the next are to come from; exposed to the ravages of disease and famine; exposed to the temptations of theft and robbery . . .

without the intelligence to provide for themselves when sick, and doomed to untold sufferings and ultimate extinction unless we intervene for their protection and preservation. . .

Much has been said of late about the importance of white labor from Germany, Ireland, Italy, and other countries, and with proper limitations and restrictions I am in favor of it; but let us always remember that we have a laboring class of our own, which is entitled to the preference. It is not sufficient to say that white labor is cheaper. I trust we are not yet so far degraded as to consult interest alone. But interest alone would dictate that it is better to give these people employment, and enable them to support themselves, than to have them remain upon our hands as a pauper race; for here they are, and here . . . they are obliged to stay. We must remember that these black people are natives of this country, and have a pre-emption right to be the recipients of whatever favors we may have to bestow. We must protect them, if not against the competition, at any rate against the exactions of white immigrants. They will expect our black laborers to do as much work in this climate as they have been accustomed to see white ones perform in more northern latitudes. We know that they cannot do it. They never did it for us as slaves, and the experience of the last six months shows that they will do no better as freedmen. . . But I fear those who may migrate hither from Europe or elsewhere will be unmindful of this fact. We ought not to forget it, and between foreign and black labor we ought always to give the preference to the latter when we can possibly make it available. And if we can offer sufficient inducements, I am inclined to think that the black man, as a field laborer, in our climate, will prove more efficient than the imported white.

We ought to encourage our colored people to virtue and industry by all means in our power. We ought to protect them in all their rights, both of person and property, as fully as we do the whites.

Negro Testimony in North Carolina

Senate Ex. Doc. no. 26. 39 Cong., 1 Sess., p. 52. Report of a committee of the North Carolina legislature. [January 22, 1866]

THE committee are aware that the great and radical changes occasioned by emancipation, in the fixed habits and customs of the people, cannot be truly estimated at once, and therefore they forbear . . . to speculate by legislative anticipation, for such changes as may even probably become necessary in the course of time. . . . They prefer to let the common law apply its flexible rules for human conduct to the new state of things, rather than frame for it rigid and perhaps misconceived legislation.

The general assembly will perceive that we have omitted all such punishments as the involuntary hiring out of persons of color, and also of whipping them, except in cases where white persons are thus punished.

There are comparatively few of the slaves lately freed who are honest; but this vice now so prevalent among them may be traced to other and more probable causes than any natural depravity peculiar to the negro race, which, by some physiologists, are declared to be naturally destitute of moral principles in a greater degree than any other people yet known. The committee have not regulated their code by this doctrine. And if it were true, there is the greatest necessity for correcting the natural obliquity by proper civil institutions wisely administered. That the race is not beyond the reach of a proper moral training, is evident from the many examples among them of sobriety, industry, and honesty. If it owed its depravity to the vicious nature peculiar to the race, we ought to be able by this time to trace some steps of improvement in the mixture of its blood with that of other races of men. The committee have not discovered, nor has it been maintained, that the mixed-blooded slave has been elevated in the moral virtue of the white race as he advanced toward it in color. . . .

We recommend that the courts should be fully opened to the negro race, for protection and property, and all the rights of freedmen, by being heard as witnesses whenever these rights are in controversy. The enactment recommended allows their evidence in civil cases only where the rights of person or property of persons of color would be precluded by the judgment or decrees made in those cases. And in criminal cases, only where violence, fraud, or injury charged to have been done by or on them is put directly in issue.

If the testimony is to be admitted, at all, it ought to be extended to such cases. The effect of thus limiting it will not deny them any advantages, but, on the contrary, will secure to them the most perfect protection that human evidence can afford. . . The result of allowing it to this extent will be, that when colored persons are parties they may call to the witness stand the whole population of the land not rendered incompetent by want of understanding, interest, or religious unbelief; while in cases where white persons are parties, white persons only will be competent witnesses.

The committee will proceed to give some of the reasons which have induced them to recommend the reception of the evidence of negroes. . .

First. The present helpless and unprotected condition of the race demands it.

Their condition of personal security is greatly changed. Prior to emancipation they were grouped on farms which they seldom left, and were overlooked by their masters or overseers, surrounded by families of white children.

They were not only watched by the whites to preserve the discipline necessary for servitude, and to prevent spoliations, but were cared for and protected as property. It was the slave-holder's interest to prevent, and, when committed to punish, any injuries done to the persons of their slaves. The interest of one slaveholder was the interest of all; so that their security was guaranteed by the common interest of the wealthiest and most powerful men in the country, and, of course, of all their kindred and adherents, among whom, generally, were their poorer white neighbors. Thus the person of the slave (without reckoning the feelings of humanity which have generally characterized the slaveholders of this State) became the subject of general protection by every class of white men, and any outrages on his person a general cause for common vindication. With this shield of security, the white aggressor was checked in his violence; and if not, his detection was almost sure. These sources of personal security are all removed by emancipation, and, without capacity to bear evidence, he stands in numerous cases utterly defenceless, except by opposing force to force against every species of outrage offered to himself or to his family. . . . If he should submit to the violence, and suffer the most grievous wrongs, there is no one who can be heard in his behalf; and he could expect, from his submission, nothing less than a repetition of his unredressed wrongs. If he should oppose force to force in the justest cause, whatever might be the result, his mouth and the mouths of all colored witnesses would be closed. . . .

Breaches of the peace always decrease in proportion to the facility and impartiality with which the violator is brought to justice. Citizens will not readily avenge themselves when the sword of the law is at hand to do it for them; but when the law is powerless, from whatever cause, the hand of private violence will be sure to come to the aid of self-defence. It is, therefore, clear that by protecting the person of the negro, we shall most certainly protect the person of the white man. If the former may be outraged . . . with impunity, because he may be incompetent to testify to the wrong, he will turn from the door of the court-house and seek his redress elsewhere. . . .

Secondly. The admission of such evidence is necessary to secure the colored people in their rights of property.

While in slavery they had no property. What was set apart for their use belonged to their master, and was under his protection. In their new state they enter on the broad ground of citizenship, and become actors in all the departments of social life. They are allowed to trade with the white man in every article of property; to possess and cultivate lands, and, by all wise means, should be encouraged to habits of industry and a desire for honest acquisition.

The protection of a man's honest gains should ever be, after the protection of his person, the next great policy of a wise

Commonwealth. If the property which a negro shall own, his cattle, his money, may all be carried off, yea, his very house robbed of its furniture, and his person of his valuables, by abandoned white men, and he shall be unable to bring the robbers to justice because the witnesses are colored, can the race feel any ardent disposition to labor for themselves? On the contrary, will they not feel doubly tempted by such want of security for their own property to become depredators themselves, especially when they reflect that it is the white man's policy which thus exposes them to licentious white men? But, besides such glaring cases of public wrongs which would go unredressed by excluding their evidence, there are many of a more private nature which depraved white men would perpetrate on them or procure to be done by their negro associates as their instruments. Already the wicked white man and corrupt dependent negro have banded together in lawless thefts and frauds on industrious and peaceful citizens, both white and black; and the white associate, if negro evidence shall be excluded, will stand secure in his villany behind his colored friend.

The calamity to public virtue and private rights would be incalculable if those who were injured could not testify against the perpetrator of the crime. How shocked would every citizen of North Carolina feel if the legislature should enact that no person assaulted and beaten, no one whose property was stolen, no one robbed, no one ravished, should bear evidence to the crime? The exclusion of negro evidence places that race in just such a condition. . . .

The protection of persons and property imperiously demands that the evidence of colored persons be admitted for that purpose, unless it should be excluded upon some ground of public policy still higher than such as favors its introduction. We have heard of but one that is plausible, and that is the general falsity of such evidence. No one pretends that it is universally false. It is urged, however, that, for the greater part, the evidence is not reliable, and, if universally believed, would produce far more wrong than right.

We are fully aware of a lamentable prevalence of this vice among the race. It is a natural offspring of their recent slavery and degradation. Forced to an involuntary servitude, and required to do many things against their will, without any apparent profit to themselves, it was natural for them to disobey if they found temporary ease in disobedience; and to avoid correction, it was equally natural for them to endeavor to escape it by falsehood. . . . If the more veracious persons only were competent witnesses, there would be many cases of the highest interest to the public without a single witness. Such a rule, however, has never marked the policy of justice in its investigation of facts. . . .

In a by-gone age the rules of evidence with us were framed rather to exclude falsehood than to admit truth; but even when these rules were administered in this spirit all persons above seven years old, of sufficient understanding, not religiously insensible to the obligation of an oath, nor parties directly interested in the cause, were competent witnesses, unless they had been rendered infamous by conviction of some infamous crime. . . . These were English rules of the common law; and so long as they prevailed there was no nation on the earth whose inhabitants were excluded as witnesses from English courts, it mattered not what their color, crime, or religion. It is probable that at a very early period after the introduction of African slavery into this State the slave was forbidden to testify against a white person, and it is probable also that the exclusion was soon extended to free persons of color. Slaves were not allowed to bear testimony against free persons of color until 1821.

The policy of excluding such testimony was founded on two considerations: First, the entire and absolute dependence of a slave on his master . . . which rendered him unfit to bear witness for or against his master, or for or against any person to whom his master extended his favor or dislike. Besides this, the settled policy was to humble the slave and extinguish in him the pride of independence. This latter policy was extended in 1821 to the free negro, who, it was alleged, was greatly corrupting the slave by claiming superior privileges over him.

Emancipation having destroyed the distinction all legislation concerning the colored race must be the same.

The rules regulating the admissibility of the evidence of white persons, with a few exceptions, remain with us as they were a century since. But all at once the slave has disappeared, and upward of 300,000 free persons of color are added to the population; these . . . constitute one-third of our entire people. . . . If it ever was, it is certainly not now our policy to degrade them. On the contrary, our true policy is to elevate them in every way consistent with the safety and good government of the community. They must be educated out of their ignorance, and reformed out of their vicious habits.

If the admission of their evidence will not seriously endanger the administration of our laws, our manifest policy is to allow it; for nothing, in our opinion, tends more to inculcate a regard for truth than the almost unavoidable detection of falsehood, which occurs in judicial investigations before a jury, where the parties and witnesses are known, and their manner and conduct are scrutinized in the ordeal of trial.

If it be true that either the negro race or the negro in our midst, civilized as he is beyond his native condition, be so mendacious that he cannot be safely heard in our court of justice, it seems to us that it is one of your highest duties to exclude them as witnesses in all cases whatsoever, as well in those in which they are the sole parties as those wherein one of the parties is a white man, and, above all things, not to allow persons of color to be convicted of capital felonies and deprived of life on such unreliable evidence. If to this suggestion it may be truly replied that he can be trusted when his own color is on trial, then it follows that he yet loves truth better than falsehood, unless he is seduced by his prejudice against the white man. Now, if this be so, this general characteristic of the race will soon develop itself, and thenceforth receive its just estimate at the hands of a white judge and a white jury. It is just to truth, however, for us to admit that neither during the wonderful and enduring conflict of arms, popularly announced in their very midst to be in behalf of their freedom, they did not exhibit, nor since its termination have they exhibited, any decided marks of prejudice against their late masters.

It must be conceded by the opponents of such evidence that if strong prejudices be sufficient to exclude the testimony of witnesses, all experience teaches that public prosecutors, near kindred, and personal enemies, ought to be set aside as incompetent; and, if general corruption be also sufficient cause for exclusion, the man whose character for truth on oath is proved by all his acquaintances to be bad, ought no more to be heard in the ascertainment of facts than a negro. Yet in these cases the witness is heard, subject to so many "grains of allowance" on account of his established and admitted infirmity as a jury may judge to be the proper measure. It is settled by our highest judicial tribunal that the testimony of a witness who commits a perjury, apparent to the jury in the very case in which he is examined, must nevertheless be weighed by the jury for what it is worth.

By the laws of all civilized Europe, regulating the competency of witnesses, none are excluded by reason of character, race, color or religion. We ourselves admit the semi-barbarian of every continent and island; of every nation and tongue; of every religion — Christian, heathen and pagan; and of every color and race, unless he may fall under the ethnological varieties of the human species denominated Negroes and Indians.

We are not prepared to admit, nor indeed do we believe, that the colored man in North Carolina is entitled to less credit on his Christian oath than the colored Musselman or heathen of Asia or Egypt . . . is when sworn on his Koran or other symbols of religious reverence. And when we consider the many thousands in the State who are in full fellowship as Christians, though we are quite sensible of the general demoralization which pervades them as a class, we feel little dread for the consequences which may attend the admissibility of their evidence as reported. . . .

We have conceded the general demoralization of the colored population; but we should do great injustice to many of them if we should close this report without excepting from the stigma hundreds who, throughout their lives, have conducted themselves in a manner altogether becoming the best of citizens, and deserving the very highest praise. These are lights, indeed, to all others; and the consideration of respect in which they are held ought to stimulate and encourage others of their race to practice the virtues of honesty and truth, which have served to distinguish the few. . . . If the proposed evidence be admitted, subject to the rules long established among us and derived from our English ancestors, the administration of justice will have little to apprehend from the depravity or prejudice of the witness.

The Labor Situation in Alabama

Senate Ex. Doc. no. 27, 39 Cong., 1 Sess., p. 60. Statement of Gen. Swayne, head of the Bureau in Alabama. [1865-1866]

ON [January 15, 1866] the legislature reassembled. The palpable failure, when it last adjourned, of the attempt to depart from the standard of "equal rights before the laws," so long established here, and the wonderful abatement of doubt and dread which the freedmen themselves effected during the holidays by going quietly to work, had wrought a marked change in the public mind. The governor had no hesitation in vetoing the objectional measures, declaring that he would set his seal to no bill which did not deal alike with all men whose circumstances were the same. The vetoes were sustained in both houses. A bill has been introduced, and will pass, applying this qualification to all laws in force, and repealing all inconsistent with it; and as the legislature long ago directed the governor to appoint a commission to codify the criminal laws, it is supposed their report, which is next week to be presented, will be in consonance with this view. . . .

One of the governor's veto messages . . . requires especial notice. In returning the labor contract bill, he states that in his opinion no remedy is necessary for violation of contracts beyond that of damages, which the common law affords. As to freedmen this is practically no remedy at all, except where unpaid wages have accrued. Indeed, it points to an abandonment of the contract system.

This statement is worthy of profound consideration. It did not emanate from me, yet I may now say that I concur in it. I found the contract system established here. . . The planters liked it, and so vigorously demanded contracts that there was danger they would not undertake to plant at all without them. Idleness was extremely prevalent, and contracts might answer to restrain their disposition. "Labor regulations" were therefore issued from this office. But it has all the while been my opinion that the freedmen would be found to be best governed by the same measures as are most effectual with ourselves, and only injured by artificial regulations. The true incentives to labor in the free States are hunger and cold, and it was only injurious expectations of parcelling out at Christmas that made freedmen evade these, in some measure, until Christmas came. This artificial barrier removed, normal relations were immediately established. The true security of labor, also, in the free States, is that whenever the laborer finds himself ill treated, or his wages insufficient or unsafe, he can quit without having to account to anybody. This is more and better than all laws. And the demand for labor will keep the freedman secure here in this particular. . .

Contracts imply bargaining and litigation, and at neither of these is the freedman a match for his employer; nor do I think he can be made so, except through an ever-present competition, to which he can appeal. Undoubtedly his credulity will be somewhat used to victimize him just now; but . . he who has but one thing to dispose of soon learns to do it to the best advantage.

Rights of the Negro in Virginia

Report of Joint Committee on Reconstruction, part ii, p. 108. Statement of John Baldwin, who in 1861 was a "Union" member of the Virginia Convention and who went to Lincoln with a plan to prevent the secession of Virginia. [1866]

THERE is a general feeling manifested in the legislature to go over our laws and to strike out the peculiar distinctive features separating the black and the white races before the law. . . The other day the subject of apprentices was brought up, and apprentices, white and black, were placed on the same footing, and in respect to both the employer is required to have them taught reading, writing and arithmetic. . . In reference to rape, abduction, and offences of that sort, all discrimination has been withdrawn as between offences committed on persons of one or the other color. . . We are wiping out gradually all distinctions; they are not very numerous in our laws. You would be surprised, in going over our legislation, to find how thoroughly the free negro has been the equal of the white man before the law in Virginia. He has always had the same right to sue, to sue as a pauper or as a paying suitor. His cases have been all tried in the same way. He has always had the same right to call witnesses as the white man. He has had the same right to acquire property, except in slaves; and it is only of late years that he has been prohibited from acquiring slaves. . .

There was some difference in regard to the mode of trying minor offences committed by a free negro; but the distinction was in favor of the negro. As, for instance, it requires the verdict of a jury to acquit a white man of an offence in a capital case; but in the case of a negro, slave or free, . . . the dissent of one magistrate out of five cleared him. It is a matter perfectly well understood by lawyers, who have practiced as criminal lawyers in Virginia, that a slave or a free negro had always the decided advantage over a white man in criminal defences. . .

Wherever you come to a class of offences in regard to tampering with slaves, or withdrawing them from their obligations to their masters, or anything of that kind, the laws were severe, and the free negro was placed, in some respects, in a worse condition than a white man, but those cases are very few; and now the universal sentiment and feeling of the people is to give to the negro, in law, all the results of the fact of his freedom. In regard to negro testimony there is a diversity of sentiment among our people. I believe everybody agrees that one of the effects of freedom will be, sooner or later, to place the negro and the white man, in this matter of testimony, on a perfect equality before the law, . . . but there is a diversity of opinion in reference to the expediency and safety of undertaking to do that thing all at one job. I think the more prudent of our people are disposed to do that gradually, taking a step at a time, and ascertaining how it works. I think the feeling now is to place in the hands of the negro the right to testify in all matters affecting his person, his property, or his family; to testify in his own case, as a white man would do; and to testify in criminal prosecutions for offences against his person, his property, or his family. . . . The disposition is to let that be the first step, and to go on gradually. You, gentlemen of the north, who have not a mass of 300,000 or 400,000 suddenly emancipated negroes in your midst, can hardly appreciate the caution we feel to be necessary in dealing with any of these problems. However much we may be determined to do them justice, there are questions of safety and expediency which must be considered by prudent and discreet men. . . . The desire and determination is, as rapidly as possible, to remove all those differences before the law, and to place the blacks on an equal footing of equality before the law. . . . There are several things to be taken into consideration. In the first place, we must let the public feeling of the white people mature. Our local government must conform to the judgment and opinion of our own people, and they must have time to make up their minds to this thing. If you attempt to force the matter, you will see that it will bring about an enmity between the races.

The Negro under the Provisional Government

Judge Henry D. Clayton's Address to the Grand Jury of Pike County, Alabama. Judge Clayton had been a Confederate major general. [1866]

AMONG the terms upon which the Confederate States terminated their heroic struggle for a separate and independent nationality, was one which guaranteed freedom to this race. Although we deplore that result, as alike injurious to the country and fatal to the negroes, the law has been placed upon our statute books in solemn form by us through our delegates.

The laws for their government, as slaves, have been repealed and others substituted adapted to their new condition. We are in honor bound to observe these laws. For myself I do not hesitate to say in private and public, officially and unofficially, that, after doing all I could to avert it, when I took off my sword in surrender I determined to observe the terms of that surrender with the same earnestness and fidelity with which I first shouldered my musket. . . .

There is nothing in the history of the past of which we need be ashamed. Whilst we cherish its glorious memories, and that of our martyred dead, we . . . remember there is still work for the living, and set ourselves about the task of reëstablishing society and rebuilding our ruined homes. Others unwilling to submit to this condition of things may seek their homes abroad. You and I are bound to this soil for life, for better or for worse. . . . What then is our duty? To repine at our lot? That is not the part of manliness; but to rise up, going forward, performing our highest missions as men. . . .

Let us deal with the facts before us as they are. The negro has been made free. It is no work of his. He did not seek freedom, and nominally free as he is, he is, beyond expression, helpless by his want of experience, and doubly helpless by his want of comprehension to understand and appreciate his condition. From the very nature of his surroundings, so far as promoting his welfare and adapting him to this new relation to society are concerned, all agencies from abroad must prove inadequate. . . .

To remedy the evils growing out of the abolition of slavery it seems two things are necessary: First, a recognition of the freedom of the race as a fact, the enactment of just and humane laws, and the willing enforcement of them. Secondly, by treating them with perfect fairness and justice in our contracts, and in every way in which we may be brought in contact with them.

By the first we convince the world of our good faith, and get rid of the system of espionage [Freedmen's Bureau], by removing the pretext of its necessity; and by the second, we secure the services of the negroes, teach them their places, and how to keep them, and convince them at last that we are indeed their best friends. . . We need the labor of the negro all over the country, and it is worth the effort to secure it. . . I might enlarge upon this subject by showing the depressing effect upon the country which would be produced by the sudden removal of so much of its productive labor. Its effect would be the decreased value of the lands, decreased agricultural products, decreased revenue to the State and country, arising from these sources, with their attendant results.

Besides all this, which appeals to our interests, gentlemen, do we owe the negro any grudge? What has he himself done to provoke our hostility? Shall we be angry with him because freedom has been forced upon him? Shall it excite our animosity because he has been suddenly and without any effort on his part, torn loose from the protection of a kind master? He is proud to call you Master yet. . . He may have been the companion of your boyhood. He may be older than you, and perhaps carried you in his arms when an infant. You may be bound to him by a thousand ties which only a Southern man knows, and which he alone can feel in all its force. It may be that when, only a few years ago, you girded on your cartridge-box and shouldered your trusty rifle, to go to meet the invaders of your country, you committed to his care your home and your loved ones; and when you were far away upon the weary march, upon the dreadful battle-field, in the trenches, and on the picket line, many and many a time you thought of that faithful old negro, and your heart warmed towards him.

A Negro's View of the Black Laws

John Wallace, Carpet Bag Rule in Florida, 1885, p. 35. Wallace was a negro politician in Florida during Reconstruction. [1865-1866]

IT is true, that some of the laws passed by the Legislature of 1865 seem to be very diabolical and oppressive to the freedmen, but when we consider the long established institution of slavery, and the danger to which the Southern whites imagined they might be subjected by reason of these people, who had always been subject only to the command of their old masters, we are of the opinion that any other people under like circumstances, would have passed the same character of laws relative to the freedmen. Many of these laws we know, of our own knowledge, were passed only to deter the freedmen from committing crime. For instance, the law prohibiting colored people handling arms of any kind without a license, was a dead letter, except in some cases where some of the freedmen would go around plantations hunting, with apparently no other occupation, such a person would be suspected of hunting something that did not belong to him and his arms would be taken away from him. We have often passed through the streets of Tallahassee with our gun upon our shoulder, without a license, and were never disturbed by any one during the time this law was in force. The law in regard to contracts between the whites and the freedmen was taken advantage of by some of the whites, and the freedmen did not get justice; but the great majority of the whites carried out their contracts to the letter, and the freedmen did as well as could be expected under the changed condition of things. These laws were taken advantage of by the carpetbaggers to marshal the freedmen to their support after the freedmen had been given the right to vote.

2. LAWS RELATING TO FREEDMEN

Marriages of Negroes (Alabama)

Senate Ex. Doc. no. 26, 39 Cong., 1 Sess. In other Southern states the legislatures passed laws similar to this ordinance.

[September, 1865]

it ordained by the people of the State of Alabama, in convention assembled, That all marriages between freedmen and freedwomen, whether in a state of slavery, or since their emancipation, heretofore solemnized by any one acting or officiating as a minister, or any one claiming to exercise the right to solemnize the rights of matrimony, whether bond or free, are hereby ratified and made valid, provided the parties are now living together as man and wife, and in all cases of freedmen and freedwomen who are now living together, recognizing each other as man and wife . . . the same are hereby declared to be man and wife, and bound by the legal obligations of such relationship. . .

The issue of such marriages or co-habitation are hereby legitimized, and shall be held to the same relations and obligations from and to their parents as if born in lawful wedlock. . .

The fathers of children born without the father and mother having lived together as man and wife, or when they have heretofore lived together as man and wife, and have ceased to do so, shall be required to take care of such children, as in the case of bastards, under the laws of this State, and such laws on this subject as may be hereafter enacted by the general assembly. . .

Hereafter, freedmen and freedwomen shall be bound by the same laws of intermarriage, and be required to conform to similar ceremonies, with the exception that they shall not be required to give bond in marrying, as in the case of whites, until otherwise enacted by the general assembly. . .

The general assembly shall be, and are hereby, invested with full powers to provide for the maintenance and support of the freedmen and women and children of the State of Alabama.

Intermarriage between the Races Forbidden (Alabama)

Penal Code of Alabama (1866), p. 31, secs. 61, 62. There were and are still similar laws in the other Southern states. [1866]

IF any white person and any negro, or the descendant of any negro, to the third generation inclusive, though one ancestor of each generation be a white person, intermarry, or live in adultery or fornication with each other, each of them must, on conviction, be imprisoned in the penitentiary, or sentenced to hard labor for the county, for not less than two, nor more than seven years. . .

Any probate judge, who issues a license for the marriage of any persons who are prohibited by the last preceding section from intermarrying, knowing that they are within the provisions of that section; and any justice of the peace, minister of the gospel, or other person by law authorized to solemnize the rites of matrimony, who performs a marriage ceremony for such persons, knowing that they are within the provisions of said section, must, each, on conviction, be fined not less than one hundred, nor more than one thousand dollars; and may also be imprisoned in the county jail, or sentenced to hard labor for the county, for not less than six months.

Civil Rights of Negroes in Arkansas

Acts of Arkansas, 1866-67, p. 98.

[February 6, 1867]

Sec. 1. Be it enacted, etc., that persons hitherto known in law in this state, as slaves or as free persons of color, shall have the right to make and enforce contracts, to sue and be sued, to be affiants, give evidence, to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold, convey and assign real and personal property, to make wills and testaments, and to have full and equal benefit of the rights of personal security, personal liberty, and private property, and of all remedies and proceedings for the enforcement and protection of the same, that white persons now have, and shall not be subjected to any other or different punishment, pain or penalty, for the commission of any act or offense, than such as are prescribed for white persons committing like acts or offenses; and all laws, and statutes of this state shall be applicable to all persons within its limits, without distinction of race or color, except as hereinafter provided.

Sec. 4. Be it further enacted, That all marriages between negroes and mulattoes shall be hereafter solemnized by the same persons and governed in all respects by the laws in force at the time as to white persons; Provided, That the clerks of the courts of each county shall keep a separate book for the record of the marriages of negroes and mulattoes.

Sec. 5. Be it further enacted, That no negro or mulatto shall be admitted to attend any public school in this state, except such schools as may be established exclusively for colored persons.

Negro Testimony in Alabama Courts

Penal Code of Alabama (1866), p. 164, sec. 68. In other Southern states similar provision was made for negro testimony.

[December 9, 1865]

FREEDMEN, free negroes, and mulattoes, are competent witnesses in any criminal case, where the defendant is a freedman, free negro, or mulatto, or where the prosecution is for an injury to the person or property of a freedman, free negro or mulatto; but they can only testify as witnesses in open court; and whenever a freedman, free negro, or mulatto, is a witness against a white person, or a white person is a witness against a freedman, free negro, or mulatto, the parties are competent witnesses, and may testify in open court, and are not disqualified by any interest in the question or suit, or by marriage.

Labor Contracts in Florida

Acts and Resolutions of General Assembly of Florida, 1865-66, p. 32.

Each Southern state had contract laws; some made no distinction between races; others did.

[January 12, 1866]

Sec. 1. Be it enacted, etc., . . . That all contracts of persons of color shall be made in writing and fully explained to them before two credible witnesses, which contract shall be in duplicate, one copy to be retained by the employer and the other filed with some judicial officer of the State and county in which the parties may be residing at the date of the contract, with the affidavit of one or both witnesses, setting forth that the terms and effect of such contract were fully explained to the colored person, and that he, she or they had voluntarily entered into and signed the contract, and no contract shall be of any validity against any person of color unless so executed and filed: Provided, That contracts for service of labor may be made for less time than thirty days by parol.

Sec. 2. And Whereas, It is essential to the welfare and prosperity of the entire population of the State that the agricultural interest be sustained and placed upon a permanent basis: It is therefore enacted, That when any person of color shall enter into a contract as aforesaid, to serve as a laborer for a year, or any other specified term, on any farm or plantation in this State, if he shall refuse or neglect to perform the stipulations of his contract by wilful disobedience of orders, wanton impudence, or disrespect to his employer or his authorized agent, failure or refusal to perform the work assigned to him, idleness, or abandonment of the premises or the employment of the party with whom the contract was made, he or she shall be liable, upon the complaint of his employer, or his agent, made under oath before any Justice of the Peace of the county, to be arrested and tried before the criminal court of the county, and upon conviction shall be subject to all the pains and penalties prescribed for the punishment of vagrancy . . . if it shall on such trial appear that the complaint made is not well founded, the court shall dismiss such complaint, and give judgment in favor of such laborer, against the employer, for such sum as may appear to be due under the contract, and for such damages as may be assessed by the jury.

Sec. 3. . . when any employee as aforesaid shall be in the occupancy of any house or room on the premises of the employer by virtue of his contract to labor, and he shall be adjudged to have violated his contract; or when any employee as aforesaid shall attempt to hold possession of such house or room beyond the term of his contract, against the consent of the employer, it shall be the duty of the Judge of the Criminal Court, upon the application of the employer and due proof made before him, to issue his writ to the Sheriff of the Court, commanding him forthwith to eject the said employee and to put the employer into full possession of his premises.

Sec. 4. . . if any person employing the services or labor of another under contract entered into as aforesaid shall violate his contract by refusing or neglecting to pay the stipulated wages or compensation agreed upon, or any part thereof, or by turning off the employee before the expiration of the term, unless for sufficient cause, or unless such right is reserved by the contract, the party so employed may make complaint thereof before the Judge of the Criminal Court, who shall at an early day, on reasonable notice to the other party, cause the same to be tried by a jury to be summoned for the purpose, who, in addition to the amount that may be proved to be due under the contract, may give such damages as they in their discretion may deem to be right and proper, and the judgment thereon shall be a first lien on the crops of all kinds in the cultivation of which such laborer may have been employed. . .

Regulations for Freedmen in Louisiana

Senate Ex. Doc. no. 2, 39 Cong., 1 Sess., p. 93. It seems to have been a custom for the Louisiana parishes and towns to make such regulations as the following, and, during 1865, they were approved by the military authorities. The legislature of Louisiana passed no laws of importance relating to the blacks, though by custom they were more stringently regulated in Louisiana than in other Southern states. [July, 1865]

WHEREAS it was formerly made the duty of the police jury to make suitable regulations for the police of slaves within the limits of the parish; and whereas slaves have become emancipated by the action of the ruling powers; and whereas it is necessary for public order, as well as for the comfort and correct deportment of said freedmen, that suitable regulations should be established for their government in their changed condition, the following ordinances are adopted with the approval of the United States military authorities commanding in said parish, viz:

Sec. 1. Be it ordained by the police jury of the parish of St. Landry, That no negro shall be allowed to pass within the limits of said parish without special permit in writing from his employer. Whoever shall violate this provision shall pay a fine of two dollars and fifty cents, or in default thereof shall be forced to work four days on the public road, or suffer corporeal punishment as provided hereinafter.

Sec. 2. . . Every negro who shall be found absent from the residence of his employer after ten o'clock at night, without a written permit from his employer, shall pay a fine of five dollars, or in default thereof, shall be compelled to work five days on the public road, or suffer corporeal punishment as hereinafter provided.

Sec. 3. . . No negro shall be permitted to rent or keep a house within said parish. Any negro violating this provision shall be immediately ejected and compelled to find an employer; and any person who shall rent, or give the use of any house to any negro, in violation of this section, shall pay a fine of five dollars for each offence.

Sec. 4. . . Every negro is required to be in the regular service of some white person, or former owner, who shall be held responsible for the conduct of said negro. But said employer or former owner may permit said negro to hire his own time by special permission in writing, which permission shall not extend over seven days at any one time. Any negro violating the provisions of this section shall be fined five dollars for each offence, or in default of the payment thereof shall be forced to work five days on the public road, or suffer corporeal punishment as hereinafter provided.

Sec. 5. . . No public meetings or congregations of negroes shall be allowed within said parish after sunset; but such public meetings and congregations may be held between the hours of sunrise and sunset, by the special permission in writing of the captain of patrol, within whose beat such meetings shall take place. This prohibition, however, is not to prevent negroes from attending the usual church services, conducted by white ministers and priests. Every negro violating the provisions of this section shall pay a fine of five dollars, or in default thereof shall be compelled to work five days on the public road, or suffer corporeal punishment as hereinafter provided.

Sec. 6. . . No negro shall be permitted to preach, exhort, or otherwise declaim to congregations of colored people, without a special permission in writing from the president of the police jury. Any negro violating the provisions of this section shall pay a fine of ten dollars, or in default shall be forced to work ten days on the public road, or suffer corporeal punishment as hereinafter provided.

Sec. 7. . . No negro who is not in the military service shall be allowed to carry fire-arms, or any kind of weapons, within the parish, without the special written permission of his employers, approved and indorsed by the nearest and most convenient chief of patrol. Any one violating the provisions of this section shall forfeit his weapons and pay a fine of five dollars, or in default of the payment of said fine, shall be forced to work five days on the public road, or suffer corporeal punishment as hereinafter provided.

Sec. 8. . . No negro shall sell, barter, or exchange any articles of merchandise or traffic within said parish without the special written permission of his employer, specifying the article of sale, barter or traffic. Any one thus offending shall pay a fine of one dollar for each offence, and suffer the forfeiture of said articles, or in default of the payment of said fine shall work one day on the public road, or suffer corporeal punishment as hereinafter provided. . .

Sec. 9. . . Any negro found drunk, within the said parish shall pay a fine of five dollars, or in default thereof work five days on the public road, or suffer corporeal punishment as hereinafter provided.

Sec. 11. . . It shall be the duty of every citizen to act as a police officer for the detection of offences and the apprehension of offenders, who shall be immediately handed over to the proper captain or chief of patrol. . .

Sec. 14. . . The corporeal punishment provided for in the foregoing sections shall consist in confining the body of the offender within a barrel placed over his or her shoulders, in the manner practiced in the army, such confinement not to continue longer than twelve hours, and for such time within the aforesaid limit as shall be fixed by the captain or chief of patrol who inflicts the penalty.

A Mississippi "Jim Crow" Law

case of negroes or mulattoes, travelling with their mistress, in the capacity of maids.

Mississippi Apprentice Law

Laws of Mississippi, 1865, p. 86. Alabama had a similar law; other states, except South Carolina, had practically the same laws for both races. Alabama and Mississippi had distinct laws for the whites. [November 22, 1865]

Sec. 1. . . It shall be the duty of all sheriffs, justices of the peace, and other civil officers of the several counties in this State, to report to the probate courts of their respective counties semi-annually, at the January and July terms of said courts, all freedmen, free negroes, and mulattoes, under the age of eighteen, in their respective counties, beats, or districts, who are orphans, or whose parent or parents have not the means or who refuse to provide for and support said minors; and thereupon it shall be the duty of said probate court to order the clerk of said court to apprentice said minors to some competent and suitable person, on such terms as the court may direct, having a particular care to the interest of said minor: Provided, that the former owner of said minors shall have the preference when, in the opinion of the court, he or she shall be a suitable person for that purpose.

Sec. 2. . . The said court shall be fully satisfied that the person or persons to whom said minor shall be apprenticed shall be a suitable person to have the charge and care of said minor, and fully to protect the interest of said minor. The said court shall require the said master or mistress to execute bond and security, payable to the State of Mississippi, conditioned that he or she shall furnish said minor with sufficient food and clothing; to treat said minor humanely; furnish medical attention in case of sickness; teach, or cause to be taught, him or her to read and write, if under fifteen years old, and will conform to any law that may be hereafter passed for the regulation of the duties and relation of master and apprentice. . .

Sec. 3. . . in the management and control of said apprentices, said master or mistress shall have the power to inflict such moderate corporal chastisement as a father or guardian is allowed to inflict on his or her child or ward at common law:

Provided, that in no case shall cruel or inhuman punishment be inflicted.

Sec. 4. . . if any apprentice shall leave the employment of his or her master or mistress, without his or her consent, said master or mistress may pursue and recapture said apprentice, and bring him or her before any justice of the peace of the county, whose duty it shall be to remand said apprentice to the service of his or her master or mistress; and in the event of a refusal on the part of said apprentice so to return, then said justice shall commit said apprentice to the jail of said county, on failure to give bond, to the next term of the county court; and it shall be the duty of said court at the first term thereafter to investigate said case, and if the court shall be of opinion that said apprentice left the employment of his or her master or mistress without good cause, to order him or her to be punished, as provided for the punishment of hired freedmen, as may be from time to time provided for by law for desertion, until he or she shall agree to return to the service of his or her master or mistress: . . . if the court shall believe that said apprentice had good cause to quit his said master or mistress, the court shall discharge said apprentice from said indenture, and also enter a judgment against the master or mistress for not more than one hundred dollars, for the use and benefit of said apprentice. . .

Sec. 5. . . if any person entice away any apprentice from his or her master or mistress, or shall knowingly employ an apprentice, or furnish him or her food or clothing without the written consent of his or her master or mistress, or shall sell or give said apprentice ardent spirits without such consent, said person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof before the county court, be punished as provided for the punishment of persons enticing from their employer hired freedmen, free negroes or mulattoes.

or parties, as provided for herein. And it is hereby made the duty of all sheriffs, constables, town constables, and all such like officers, and city marshals, to report to some officer having jurisdiction all violations of any of the provisions of this act, and it shall be the duty of the county courts to enquire if any officers have neglected any of the duties required by this act, and in case any officer shall fail or neglect any duty herein it shall be the duty of the county court to fine said officer, upon conviction, not exceeding one hundred dollars, to be paid into the county treasury for county purposes. . .

Sec. 6. . . The same duties and liabilities existing among white persons of this State shall attach to freedmen, free negroes or mulattoes, to support their indigent families and all colored paupers; and that in order to secure a support for such indigent freedmen, free negroes, or mulattoes, it shall be lawful and is hereby made the duty of the county police of each county in this State, to levy a poll or capitation tax on each and every freedman, free negro, or mulatto, between the ages of eighteen and sixty years, not to exceed the sum of one dollar annually to each person so taxed, which tax, when collected, shall be paid into the county treasurer's hands, and constitute a fund to be called the Freedmen's Pauper Fund, which shall be applied by the commissioners of the poor for the maintenance of the poor of the freedmen, free negroes, and mulattoes of this State, under such regulations as may be established by the boards of county police in the respective counties of this State.

Sec. 7. . . If any freedman, free negro, or mulatto shall fail or refuse to pay any tax levied according to the provisions of the sixth section of this act, it shall be prima facie evidence of vagrancy, and it shall be the duty of the sheriff to arrest such freedman, free negro, or mulatto or such person refusing or neglecting to pay such tax, and proceed at once to hire for the shortest time such delinquent tax-payer to any one who will pay the said tax, with accruing costs, giving preference to the employer, if there be one.

The master or mistress shall provide for the apprentice diet, clothes, lodging, and accommodations fit and necessary; and such apprentice shall teach or cause to be taught to read and write, and the elementary rules of arithmetic; and at the expiration of every apprenticeship shall pay to each apprentice six dollars, and furnish him with a new suit of clothes, and a new Bible; and if upon complaint made to the court of pleas and quarter sessions it shall appear that any apprentice is ill-used, or not taught the trade, profession and employment to which he was bound, or that any apprentice is not taught reading,

The Domestic Relations of Negroes, Pauperism and Vagrancy (South Carolina)

Statutes at Large of South Carolina, vol. xiii, p. 269. This statute relates also to whites except where otherwise specified. Much of this, it is said, was borrowed from the British West Indies.

[December 21, 1865]

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives, now met and sitting in General Assembly, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

HUSBAND AND WIFE

I. The relation of husband and wife amongst persons of color is established.

II. Those who now live as such are declared to be husband and wife.

III. In case of one man having two or more reputed wives, or one woman two or more reputed husbands, the man shall, by the first day of April next, select one of his reputed wives, or the woman one of her reputed husbands; and the ceremony of marriage between this man or woman, and the person so selected, shall be performed.

IV. Every colored child, heretofore born, is declared to be the legitimate child of its mother, and also of his colored father, if he is acknowledged by such a father.

V. Persons of color desirous hereafter to become husband and wife, should have the contract of marriage duly solemnized.

VI. A Clergyman, the District Judge, a Magistrate, or any judicial officer, may solemnize marriages.

VII. Cohabitation, with reputation, or recognition of the parties, shall be evidence of marriage in cases criminal and civil.

VIII. One who is a pauper or a charge to the public shall not be competent to contract marriage. Marriage between a white person and a person of color shall be illegal and void.

IX. The marriage of an apprentice shall not, without the consent of the master, be lawful.

X. A husband shall not, for any cause, abandon or turn away his wife, nor a wife her husband. Either of them that abandons or turns away the other may be prosecuted for a misdemeanor; and, upon conviction thereof, before a District Judge, may be punished by a fine and corporal punishment, duly apportioned to the circumstances of aggravation or mitigation. A husband not disabled, who has been thus convicted of having abandoned or turned away his wife, or who has been shown to fail in maintaining his wife and children, may be bound to service by the District Judge from year to year, and so much of the profits of his labor as may be requisite, be applied to the maintenance of his wife and children; the distribution between them being made according to their respective merits and necessities. In like manner, a wife not disabled, who has been thus convicted, may be bound, and the proceeds of her labor applied to the maintenance of her children. In either case, any surplus profit shall go to the person bound. At the end of any year for which he was bound, the husband shall have the right to return to or receive back his wife, and thereupon shall be discharged upon condition of his afterwards maintaining his wife and children. A like right a wife shall have, at the end of the year for which she was bound on condition of her making future exertions to maintain her family.

XI. Whenever a husband shall be convicted of having abandoned or turned away his wife, she shall be competent to make a contract for service; and until he shall return to her or receive her back, she shall have all the rights, and be subject to all the liabilities, of an unmarried woman, except the right to contract marriage. When either husband or wife has abandoned the other in any District, and that other remains there, if upon the warrant or summons against the one charged of misdemeanor, under the Section next preceding, there be a return by a Sheriff or Constable, under oath, that the accused has left the District, or absconded, so that there can not be personal service, the prosecution may proceed as if the accused had been arrested, and, upon conviction, all the other consequences shall follow, except punishment, and that shall be reserved until the accused may be brought into Court, when an opportunity shall be given for disproving the truth of the return and setting aside the conviction.

PARENT AND CHILD

XII. The relation of parent and child, amongst persons of color, is recognized, confers all the rights and remedies, civil and criminal, and imposes all the duties that are incident thereto by law, unless the same are modified by this Act, or some legislation connected herewith.

XIII. The father shall support and maintain his children under fifteen years of age, whether they be born of one of his reputed wives or of any other woman.

GUARDIAN AND WARD

XIV. The relation of guardian and ward, as it now exists in this State, with all the rights and duties incident thereto, is extended to persons of color, with the modifications made by this Act.

MASTER AND APPRENTICE

XV. A child, over the age of two years, born of a colored parent, may be bound by the father, if he be living in the District, or in case of his death or absence from the District, by the mother, as an apprentice to any respectable white or colored person who is competent to make a contract; a male until he shall attain the age of twenty-one years, and a female until she shall attain the age of eighteen.

XVI. Illegitimate children, within the ages above specified, may be bound by the mother.

XVII. Colored children, between the ages mentioned, who have neither father nor mother living in the District in which they are found, or whose parents are paupers, or unable to afford to them maintenance, or whose parents are not teaching them habits of industry and honesty, or are persons of notoriously bad character, or are vagrants, or have been, either of them, convicted of any infamous offense, may be bound as apprentices by the District Judge, or one of the Magistrates, for the aforesaid term.

XVIII. Males of the age of twelve years, and females of the age of ten years, shall sign the indenture of apprenticeship, and be bound thereby.

XIX. When the apprentice is under these ages, and in all cases of compulsory apprenticeship, where the infant refuses assent, his signature shall not be necessary to the validity of the apprenticeship. The master's obligation of apprenticeship, in all cases of compulsory apprenticeship, and cases where the father or mother does not bind the child, shall be executed in the presence of the District Judge, or one of the Magistrates, certified by him, and filed in the office of the Clerk of the District Court.

XX. The indenture of voluntary apprenticeship shall be under seal, and be signed by the master, the parent and the apprentice, attested by two credible witnesses, and approved by the District Judge, or one of the Magistrates. . .

XXII. The master or mistress shall teach the apprentice the business of husbandry, or some other useful trade or business, which shall be specified in the instrument of apprenticeship; shall furnish him wholesome food and suitable clothing; teach him habits of industry, honesty and morality; govern and treat him with humanity; and if there be a school within a convenient distance, in which colored children are taught, shall send him to school at least six weeks in every year of his apprenticeship, after he shall be of the age of ten years: Provided, That the teacher of such school shall have the license of the District Judge to establish the same.

XXIII. The master shall have authority to inflict moderate chastisement and impose reasonable restraint upon his apprentice, and to recapture him if he depart from his service.

XXIV. The master shall receive to his own use the profits of the labor of his apprentice. The relation of master and apprentice shall be dissolved by the death of the master, except where the apprentice is engaged in husbandry, and may be dissolved by order of the District Judge, when both parties consent, or it shall appear to be seriously detrimental to either party. In the excepted case, it shall terminate at the end of the year in which the master died.

XXV. In cases of the habitual violation or neglect of the duties herein imposed on the master, and whenever the apprentice is in danger of moral contamination by the vicious conduct of the master, the relation of master and apprentice may be dissolved by the order of the District Judge; and any person shall have the right to complain to the District Judge that the master does not exercise proper discipline over his apprentice, to the injury of his neighbors; and if upon investigation, it shall be so found, the relation between the parties shall be dissolved.

XXVI. In case of alleged violation of duty, or of misconduct on the part of the master or apprentice, either party may make complaint to a Magistrate, who shall summon the parties before him, inquire into the causes of complaint, and make such order as shall be meet, not extending to the dissolution of the relation of the parties; and if the master be found to be in default, he shall be fined not exceeding twenty dollars and costs; and if the apprentice be in default, he may be corrected in such manner as the Magistrate shall order. A frivolous complaint made by either party shall be regarded as a default.

XXVII. In cases in which the District Judge shall order the apprentice to be discharged for immoderate correction, or unlawful restraint of the apprentice, the master shall be liable to indictment, and, on conviction, to fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the Court, not exceeding a fine of fifty dollars, and imprisonment of thirty days; and, also, to an action for damages, by the apprentice. . .

XXIX. A mechanic, artisan or shop keeper, or other person who is required to have a license, shall not receive any colored apprentice without having first obtained such license.

XXX. At the expiration of his term of service, the apprentice shall have the right to recover from his master a sum not exceeding sixty dollars.

CONTRACTS FOR SERVICE

XXXV. All persons of color who may contract for service or labor, shall be known as servants, and those with whom they contract, shall be known as masters.

XXXVI. Contracts between masters and servants, for one month or more, shall be in writing, be attested by one white witness, and be approved by the Judge of the District Court, or by a magistrate. . .

XXXVIII. If the rate of wages be not stipulated by the parties to the contract, it shall be fixed by the District Judge, or a Magistrate, on application by one of the parties, and notice to the other.

XXXIX. A person of color, who has no parent living in the District, and is ten years of age, and is not an apprentice, may make a valid contract for labor or service for one year or less.

XL. Contracts between masters and servants may be set aside for fraud or unfairness, notwithstanding they have been approved.

XLI. Written contracts between masters and servants shall be presented for approval within twenty days after their execution.

XLII. Contracts for one month or more shall not be binding on the servant, unless they are in writing, and have been presented for approval within the time aforesaid.

XLIII. For any neglect of the duty to make a contract as herein directed, or the evasion of that duty by the repeated employment of the same persons for periods less than one month, the party offending shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and be liable on conviction, to pay a sum not exceeding fifty dollars, and not less than five dollars, for each person so employed. No written contract shall be required when the servant voluntarily receives no remuneration except food and clothing. . .

REGULATIONS OF LABOR ON FARMS

XLV. On farms or in out-door service, the hours of labor, except on Sunday, shall be from sun-rise to sun-set, with a reasonable interval for breakfast and dinner. Servants shall rise at the dawn in the morning, feed, water and care for the animals on the farm, do the usual and needful work about the premises, prepare their meals for the day, if required by the master, and begin the farm work or other work by sun-rise. The servant shall be careful of all the animals and property of his master, and especially of the animals and implements used by him, shall protect the same from injury by other persons, and shall be answerable for all property lost, destroyed or injured by his negligence, dishonesty or bad faith.

XLVI. All lost time, not caused by the act of the master, and all losses occasioned by neglect of the duties hereinbefore described, may be deducted from the wages of the servant; and food, nursing and other necessaries for the servant, whilst he is absent from work on account of sickness or other cause, may also be deducted from his wages. Servants shall be quiet and orderly in their quarters, at their work, and on the premises; shall extinguish their lights and fires, and retire to rest at seasonable hours. Work at night, and out-door work in inclement weather, shall not be exacted, unless in case of necessity. Servants shall not be kept at home on Sunday, unless to take care of the premises, or animals thereupon, or for work of daily necessity, or on unusual occasions; and in such cases, only so many shall be kept at home as are necessary for these purposes. Sunday work shall be done by the servants in turn, except in cases of sickness or other disability, when it may be assigned to them out of their regular turn. Absentees on Sunday shall return to their homes by sun-set.

XLVII. The master may give to his servant a task at work about the business of the farm which shall be reasonable. If the servant complain of the task, the District Judge, or a Magistrate, shall have power to reduce or increase it. Failure to do a task shall be deemed evidence of indolence, but a single failure shall not be conclusive. When the servant has entered into a contract, he may be required to rate himself as a full hand, three-fourths, half, or one-fourth hand, and according to this rate, inserted in the contract, shall be the task, and of course the wages.

XLVIII. Visitors or other persons shall not be invited or allowed by the servant to come or remain upon the premises of the master without his express permission.

XLIX. Servants shall not be absent from the premises without the permission of the master.

RIGHTS OF MASTER AS BETWEEN HIMSELF AND HIS SERVANT

L. When the servant shall depart from the service of the master without good cause, he shall forfeit the wages due to him. The servant shall obey all lawful orders of the master or his agent, and shall be honest, truthful, sober, civil and diligent in his business. The master may moderately correct servants who have made contracts, and are under eighteen years of age. He shall not be liable to pay for any additional or extraordinary services or labor of his servant, the same being necessary, unless by express agreement.

CAUSES OF DISCHARGE OF A SERVANT

LI. The master may discharge his servant for wilful disobedience of the lawful order of himself or his agent; habitual negligence or indolence in business; drunkenness, gross moral or legal misconduct; want of respect and civility to himself, his family, guests or agents; or for prolonged absence from the premises, or absence on two or more occasions without permission.

LII. For any acts or things herein declared to be causes for the discharge of a servant, or for any breach of contract or duty by him, instead of discharging the servant, the master may complain to the District Judge, or one of the Magistrates, who shall have power, on being satisfied of the misconduct complained of, to inflict, or cause to be inflicted, on the servant, suitable corporal punishment, or impose upon him such pecuniary fine as may be thought fit, and immediately to remand him to his work; which fine shall be deducted from his wages, if not otherwise paid.

LIII. If a master has made a valid contract with a servant, the District Judge or Magistrate may compel such servant to observe his contract, by ordering infliction of the punishment, or imposition of the fine hereinbefore authorized.

RIGHTS OF MASTER AS TO THIRD PERSONS

LIV. The master shall not be liable for the voluntary trespasses, torts or misdemeanors of his servants. He shall not be liable for any contract of a servant, unless made by his authority; nor for the acts of the servant, unless they shall be done within the scope of the authority intrusted to him by the master, or in the course of his employment for the master; in which excepted cases the master shall be answerable for the fraud, negligence or want of skill of his servant. The master's right of self-defense shall embrace his servant. It shall be his duty to protect his servant from violence by others, in his presence, and he may render him aid and assistance in obtaining redress for injury to his rights of person or property.

LV. Any person who shall deprive a master of the service of his servant, by enticing him away, or by harboring and detaining him, knowing him to be a servant, or by beating, confining, disabling or otherwise injuring him, shall be liable, on conviction thereof, to a fine not exceeding two hundred dollars, and not less than twenty dollars, and to imprisonment or hard labor, at the discretion of the Court, not exceeding sixty days; and, also, to an action by the master to recover damages for loss of services.

LVI. The master may command his servant to aid him in the defense of his own person, family, premises or property; or of the personal property of any servant on the premises of the master; and it shall be the duty of the servant, promptly to obey such command.

LVII. The master shall not be bound to furnish medicine or medical assistance for his servant, without his express engagement.

LVIII. A master may give the character of one who has been in his service to a person who may make inquiry of him; which shall be a privileged communication, unless it be falsely and maliciously given. And no servant shall have the power to make a new contract, without the production of the discharge of his former master, District Judge or Magistrate.

LIX. Any person who shall wilfully misrepresent the character of a servant, whether he has been in his service or not, either for moral qualities, or for skill or experience in any employment or service, shall be liable to an action for damages by any one who has been aggrieved thereby.

LX. Upon the conviction of any master of larceny or felony, the District Judge shall have the right, upon the demand of any white freeholder, to annul the contract between such convict and his colored servants. If any white freeholder shall complain to the District Judge that any master so manages and controls his colored servants as to make them a nuisance to the neighborhood, the Judge shall order an issue to be made up and tried before a jury, and if such issue is found in favor of the complainant, the District Judge shall annul the contract between such master and his colored servant or servants, and in each of the cases above provided for, he shall not approve any subsequent contract between such person and any colored servant for two years thereafter.

RIGHTS OF SERVANT AS BETWEEN HIMSELF AND MASTER

LXI. The servant may depart from the master's service for an insufficient supply of wholesome food; for an unauthorized battery upon his own person, or one of his family, not committed in defense of the person, family, guests or agents of the master, not to prevent a crime or aggravated misdemeanor; invasion by the master of the conjugal rights of the servant; or his failure to pay wages when due; and may recover wages due for services rendered to the time of his departure.

LXII. The contract for service shall not be terminated by the death of the master, without the assent of the servant. Wages due to white laborers and to white and colored servants shall rank as rent does, in case of the insufficiency of the master's property to pay all debts and demands against him, but not more than one year's wages shall be so preferred. When wrongfully discharged from service, the servant may recover wages for the whole period of service according to the contract. If his wages have not been paid to the day of his discharge, he may regard his contract rescinded by the discharge, and recover wages up to that time. . .

LXIV. The master shall, upon the discharge, or at the expiration of his term of service, furnish the servant with a certificate of discharge, and at the request of the servant, give him a certificate of character.

MUTUAL RIGHTS OF MASTER AND SERVANT

LXV. Whenever a master discharges a servant, the servant may make immediate complaint to a District Judge or Magistrate, and whenever a servant departs from his master's service, the master may make like complaint. In either case, the District Judge or Magistrate, shall, by summons or warrant, have the parties brought before him, hear them and their witnesses, and decide as to the sufficiency of the cause of his discharge or departure. This decision shall not affect or prejudice any further action on either side, but it may avail to restore the relation of master and servant between the parties, if that be ordered. If the servant be decided to have been unlawfully discharged, and should desire to return to service under his contract, the master shall be compelled to receive him, under the penalty of twenty dollars, in case of his refusal. If the master desire the return of the servant, who has been decided to have departed without sufficient cause, the servant may be compelled, by fine and corporal punishment, to return to the service of the master, and perform his duties under the contract.

RIGHTS OF SERVANTS AS TO THIRD PERSONS

LXVI. The servant shall not be liable for contracts made by the express authority of his master.

LXVII. A servant shall not be liable, civilly or criminally, for any act done by the command of his master, in defense of the master's person, family, guests, agents, servants, premises or property. He shall not be liable, in any action ex delicto, for any tort committed on the premises of the master by his express command.

HOUSE SERVANTS AND OTHERS NOT IN HUSBANDRY

LXVIII. The rules and regulations prescribed for master and servant apply to persons in service as household servants, conferring the same rights and imposing the same duties, with the following modifications:

LXIX. Servants and apprentices employed as house servants in the various duties of the household, and in all the domestic duties of the family, shall, at all hours of the day and night, and on all days of the week, promptly answer all calls and obey and execute all lawful orders and commands of the family in whose service they are employed.

LXX. It is the duty of this class of servants to be especially civil and polite to their masters, their families and guests, and they shall receive gentle and kind treatment.

FOR ALL SERVANTS

LXXI. In all contracts between master and servant for service, the foregoing regulations shall be stipulations, unless it shall be otherwise provided in the contract, and the following form shall be a sufficient contract, unless some special agreement be made between the parties:

MECHANICS, ARTISANS AND SHOPKEEPERS

No person of color shall pursue or practice the art, trade or business of an artisan, mechanic or shopkeeper, or any other trade, employment or business (besides that of husbandry, or that of a servant under a contract for service or labor,) on his own account and for his own benefit, or in partnership with a white person, or as agent or servant of any person, until he shall have obtained a license therefor from the Judge of the District Court; which license shall be good for one year only. This license the Judge may grant upon petition of the applicant, and upon being satisfied of his skill and fitness, and of his good moral character, and upon payment, by the applicant, to the Clerk of the District Court, of one hundred dollars, if a shopkeeper or peddler, to be paid annually, and ten dollars, if a mechanic, artisan or to engage in any other trade, also to be paid annually: Provided, however, That upon complaint being made and proved to the District Judge of an abuse of such license he shall revoke the same: and provided, also, That no person of color shall practice any mechanical art or trade unless he shows that he has served an apprenticeship in such trade or art, or is now practicing such trade or art. . .

Where, upon any farm or lands, there now are persons of color, who were formerly the slaves of the owner, lessee or occupant of the said farm or lands, who may have been there on the tenth day of November, eighteen hundred and sixty-five, and have been on said land for six months previous; and who are helpless, either from old age, infancy, disease or other cause; and who are unable, of themselves, and have no parent or other officer able to maintain them, and to provide other homes or quarters, it shall not be lawful for the present, or any subsequent owner, lessee or occupant, before the first day of January, in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, to evict or drive from the houses which now are, or hereafter shall be, lawfully occupied by such helpless persons of color, such helpless persons, or any of them, by rendering such houses uninhabitable, or by any other means; and upon conviction of having done so, every such owner, lessee, occupant, agent or other person, shall be fined not exceeding fifty dollars, nor less than five dollars, for each person of color so evicted, and may be imprisoned, at the discretion of the Judge of the District Court, not exceeding one month.

LXXVI. But the owner, lessee, occupant of such farm or lands shall, nevertheless, have authority to preserve order and good conduct in the houses so occupied as aforesaid, and to prevent visitors and other persons from sojourning therein; and for insolence to himself or family, for theft or trespass committed by such persons of color, or any one of them, upon the premises, or for violation by them of his regulations for the preservation of order and good conduct, the prevention of visitors and sojourners therein, the owner, lessee, or occupant, may complain to the Judge of the District Court, or a Magistrate, who, upon finding the complaint well founded, may, according to the case, cause the immediate eviction of some or all of such persons of color, and their removal from the premises. After the period aforesaid, they may be ejected, as is hereinafter provided in case of intruders.

LXXVII. It shall be the duty of the Judge of the District Court, or of any Magistrate, on complaint made to him, that persons of color have intruded into any house or upon any premises, as trespassers or otherwise, or that they unlawfully remained therein without permission of the owner, on ascertaining the complaint to be well founded, to cause such persons to be immediately removed therefrom; and in case of the return of such persons, without lawful permission, the party so offending may be subjected to such fine and corporal punishment as the Magistrate or District Judge may see proper to impose.

If there be no written lease, or the term of lease shall have expired, the person of color in possession shall be a tenant at will, and shall not be entitled to notice; and on complaint by any person interested to the Judge of the District Court, or a Magistrate, such person of color shall be instantly ejected by order or warrant, unless he produce a written lease authorizing his possession, or prove that such writing existed and was lost.

LXXXVI. If the District Court Fund, after the payment of the sums with which it is charged, on account of the salary of the Judge of the District Court, Superintendent of Convicts, Jurors and other expenses of the Court, and of convicts, shall be insufficient to support indigent persons of color, who may be proper charges on the public, the Board aforesaid shall have power to impose for that purpose, whenever it may be required, a tax of one dollar on each male person of color between the ages of eighteen and fifty years, and fifty cents on each unmarried female person of color between the ages of eighteen and forty-five; to be collected in each precinct by a Magistrate thereof: Provided, That the said imposition of a tax shall be approved in writing by the Judge of the District Court, and that his approval shall appear in the Journals of that Court.

XCII. The Board of Relief of Indigent Persons of Color shall determine the sum necessary for the support of each indigent person of color, who shall be deemed a proper charge on the public, the sum required by each precinct, the sum which shall be paid to each Magistrate to be disbursed by him, when reports from occupants as aforesaid shall be required, and when a tax shall be imposed. It shall direct the Magistrates respectively in the performance of the duties required of them in reference to paupers and the District Court Fund, and it shall report to the District Court all delinquencies and delinquents.

XCIV. On satisfactory information to the District Judge, or a Magistrate, that a person of color has removed from another district, and is likely to become a charge to the district into which he has removed, the District Judge, or the Magistrate, shall proceed against such person as a vagrant, and, on conviction, he shall be punished as such: Provided, however, That persons of color who were removed by their former masters from other districts, within the last five years, shall be allowed twelve months to return to the districts from which they were removed; and those who have been separated from their families or relatives shall be allowed to return to them within twelve months.

Sec. 4. . . Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to admit persons of color to serve on the jury: And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not be so construed as to require the education of colored and white children in the same school.

The Negro in the New Constitutions

Constitution of Texas, adopted in 1866. This is an example of one of the "Johnson" state constitutions in regard to the negro. [1866]

[Article VIII.] Sec. 1. African slavery as it heretofore existed, having been terminated within this State by the Government of the United States, by force of arms, and its reestablishment being prohibited by the amendment to the Constitution of the United States, it is declared that neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crimes, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist in this State; and Africans and their descendants shall be protected in their rights of person and property by appropriate legislation; and shall have the right to contract and be contracted with; to sue and be sued; to acquire, hold, and transmit property; and all criminal prosecutions against them shall be conducted in the same manner as prosecutions for like offenses against the white race, and they shall be subject to like penalties.

Sec. 2. Africans and their descendants shall not be prohibited, on account of their color or race, from testifying orally, as witnesses, in any case, civil or criminal, involving the right of injury to, or crime against, any of them in person or property, under the same rules of evidence that may be applicable to the white race; the credibility of their testimony to be determined by the court or jury hearing the same; and the legislature shall have power to authorize them to testify as witnesses in all other cases, under such regulations as may be described, as to facts hereafter occurring.

[Article X.] Sec. 7. The legislature may provide for the levying of a tax for educational purposes: . . . Provided, That all the sums arising from said tax which may be collected from Africans, or persons of African descent, shall be exclusively appropriated for the maintenance of a system of public schools for Africans and their children; and it shall be the duty of the legislature to encourage schools among these people.

FREEDMEN'S BANK

THE FREEDMEN'S BUREAU AND THE FREEDMEN'S BANK

INTRODUCTION

A MOST important cause of the failure of the President's policy was the unfriendly influence of the Freedmen's Bureau. This institution was in existence before Johnson began his work of restoration, was most active during the period 1865-1867, and was practically independent of the President, in entire control of the blacks, and interfering at will with the State governments. This "Bureau of Freedmen, Refugees, and Abandoned Lands" was created by an act of Congress, March 3, 1865, to last one year, but was continued in full force by later acts until 1868; the educational department was continued until 1872. Its establishment was due partly to the fear entertained by the North that the Southerners if left to deal with the blacks would attempt to re-establish slavery, partly to the necessity for extending relief to needy negroes and whites in the devastated South, and partly to take charge of confiscated property. During the Civil War many negroes came into the Federal lines and had to be cared for. The able-bodied men were enlisted in the army and the women, children and old men were settled in large camps on confiscated Southern property, where they were cared for alternately by the War Department and by the Treasury Department until the organization of the Freedmen's Bureau. At the head of the Bureau was a commissioner, General O. O. Howard, and under him in each Southern state was an assistant commissioner with a corps of subordinate local agents. The officials had full authority in all matters that concerned the blacks. The work of the Bureau may be classified as follows: (1) distribution of rations and medical supplies among the blacks; (2) establishing schools for them and aiding benevolent societies to establish schools and churches; (3) regulation of labor and contracts; (4) the custody of confiscated lands; (5) administration of justice in all cases in which blacks were concerned. For several years the ex-slaves were under the almost absolute control of the Bureau. Whether this control had a good or bad effect is still disputed, the Southern whites and many Northerners holding that the results of the Bureau's work were bad; others that it was distinctly good. There is now no doubt that while most of the higher officials of the Bureau were good men, the subordinate agents were generally without character or judgment and that their interference between the races caused lasting discord. Much necessary relief work was done, especially among the whites, but demoralization was also caused by it, and later the institution was used by the agents as a means of securing negro votes. As to the Bureau's influence in educational and religious matters, North and South have not yet agreed. The whole field of labor and contracts was covered by the minute regulations of the Bureau which, good in theory, were impracticable, and which failed altogether, but not until labor had been disorganized for several years. The administration of justice by the Bureau agents gradually became a petty persecution of the whites and bloody conflicts sometimes resulted. The law creating the Bureau provided for the division of the confiscated property among the negroes, and, though executed only in parts of Louisiana, South Carolina, Florida, and Georgia, caused the negroes to believe that they were to be cared for at the expense of their former masters. This belief made them subject to swindling schemes perpetrated by persons who promised to secure lands for them. When negro suffrage was imposed by Congress upon the Southern states the Bureau aided the Union League in organizing the blacks into a political party opposed to the whites. Practically all the subordinate Bureau officials and several of the higher ones secured office through their control of the blacks.

The Freedmen's Savings and Trust Company was not legally connected with the Bureau nor was it a government institution, but it was conducted mainly by Bureau officials, and the negro depositors became fixed in the belief that it was an institution of the government and that the latter was responsible for the loss of their savings entrusted to the bank.

1. LAWS RELATING TO THE BUREAU

First Freedmen's Bureau Act

Acts and Resolutions, 38 Cong., 2 Sess., p. 96.

[March 3, 1865]

Be it enacted . . . That there is hereby established in the War Department, to continue during the present war of rebellion, and for one year thereafter, a Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands, to which shall be committed, as hereinafter provided, the supervision and management of all abandoned lands, and the control of all subjects relating to refugees and freedmen from rebel States, or from any district of country within the territory embraced in the operations of the army, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the head of the bureau and approved by the President. The said bureau shall be under the management and control of a commissioner, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, whose compensation shall be three thousand dollars per annum, and such number of clerks as may be assigned to him by the Secretary of War, not exceeding one chief clerk, two of the fourth class, two of the third class, and five of the first class. And the commissioner, and all persons appointed under this act, shall, before entering upon their duties, take the ["iron clad" test oath] . . . and the commissioner and chief clerk shall, before entering upon their duties, give bonds to the Treasurer of the United States, the former in the sum of fifty thousand dollars, and the latter in the sum of ten thousand dollars, conditioned for the faithful discharge of their duties. . . .

Sec. 2. . . . The Secretary of War may direct such issues or provisions, clothing and fuel as he may deem needful for the immediate and temporary shelter and supply of destitute and suffering refugees and freedmen, and their wives and children. . . .

Sec. 3. . . . The President may, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint an assistant commissioner for each of the States declared to be in insurrection, not exceeding ten in number, who shall, under the direction of the commissioner, aid in the execution of the provisions of this act; and he shall give a bond to the Treasurer of the United States, in the sum of twenty thousand dollars. . . Each of said [assistant] commissioners shall receive an annual salary of two thousand five hundred dollars in full compensation for all his services; and any military officer may be detailed and assigned to duty under this act without increase of pay or allowances. The commissioner shall, before the commencement of each regular session of Congress, make full report of his proceedings, with exhibits of the state of his accounts, to the President, who shall communicate the same to Congress, and shall also make special reports whenever required to do so by the President or either house of Congress; and the assistant commissioners shall make quarterly reports of their proceedings to the commissioner, and also such other special reports as from time to time may be required.

Sec. 4. . . The commissioner, under the direction of the President, shall have authority to set apart, for the use of loyal refugees and freedmen, such tracts of lands within the insurrectionary States as shall have been abandoned, or to which the United States shall have acquired title by confiscation or sale, or otherwise; and to every male citizen, whether refugee or freedman, as aforesaid, there shall be assigned not more than forty acres of such land, and the person to whom it was so assigned shall be protected in the use and enjoyment of the land for the term of three years at an annual rent not exceeding six per centum upon the value of such land as it was appraised by the State authorities in the year eighteen hundred and sixty for the purpose of taxation; and in case no such appraisal can be found, then the rental shall be based upon the estimated value of the land in said year, to be ascertained in such manner as the commissioner may by regulation prescribe. At the end of said term, or at any time during said term, the occupants of any parcels so assigned may purchase the land and receive such title thereto as the United States can convey, upon paying therefor the value of the land as ascertained and fixed for the purpose of determining the annual rent aforesaid.

Second Freedmen's Bureau Act

Acts and Resolutions, 39 Cong., 1 Sess., p. 191. A much more stringent bill was passed and vetoed by the President. It failed to pass over the veto. This act was also vetoed but was passed over the veto. [July 16, 1866]

Be it enacted . . . That the act to establish a Bureau for the relief of Freedmen and Refugees, approved March third, eighteen hundred sixty-five, shall continue in force for the term of two years from and after the passage of this act.

Sec. 2. . . The supervision and care of said bureau shall extend to all loyal refugees and freedmen, so far as the same may be necessary to enable them as speedily as practicable to become self-supporting citizens of the United States, and to aid them in making the freedom conferred by the proclamation of the Commander-in-Chief, by emancipation under the laws of the States, and by constitutional amendment, available to them and beneficial to the Republic.

Sec. 3. . . The President shall, by and with the consent of the Senate, appoint two assistant commissioners, in addition to those authorized by the act to which this is an amendment, who shall give like bonds and receive the same annual salaries provided in said act; and each of the assistant commissioners of the bureau shall have charge of the district containing such refugees or freedmen, to be assigned him by the Commissioner, with the approval of the President. And the Commissioner shall, under the direction of the President, and so far as the same shall be, in his judgment, necessary for the efficient and economical administration of the affairs of the bureau, appoint such agents, clerks and assistants as may be required for the proper conduct of the bureau. Military officers or enlisted men may be detailed for service and assigned to duty under this act; and the President may, if in his judgment safe and judicious so to do, detail from the Army all the officers and agents of the bureau; but no officer so assigned shall have increase of pay or allowances. Each agent or clerk, not heretofore authorized by law, not being a military officer, shall have an annual salary of not less than $500, nor more than $1,200, according to the service required of him. And it shall be the duty of the Commissioner, when it can be done consistently with the public interest, to appoint, as assistant commissioners, agents, and clerks, such men as have proved their loyalty by faithful service in the armies of the Union during the rebellion. And all persons appointed to service under this act and the act to which this is an amendment, shall be so far deemed in the military service of the United States as to be under the military jurisdiction and entitled to the military protection of the Government while in the discharge of the duties of their office.

Sec. 4. . . The officers of the Veteran Reserve Corps or of the volunteer service, now on duty in the Freedmen's Bureau as assistant commissioners, agents, medical officers, or in other capacities, whose regiments or corps have been or may hereafter be mustered out of service, may be retained upon such duty as officers of said bureau, with the same compensation as is now provided by law for their respective grades; and the Secretary of War shall have power to fill vacancies until other officers can be detailed in their places without detriment to the public service.

Sec. 5. . . The second section of the act to which this is an amendment shall be deemed to authorize the Secretary of War to issue such medical stores or other supplies and transportation and afford such medical or other aid as may be needful for the purposes named in said section: Provided, that no person shall be deemed "destitute," "suffering," or "dependent upon the Government for support," within the meaning of this act, who is able to find employment, and could, by proper industry and exertion, avoid such destitution, suffering, or dependency.

Sec. 6. . . Whereas, by the provisions of [an act of February 6, 1863] certain lands in the parishes of St. Helena and St. Luke, South Carolina, were bid in by the United States at public tax sales, and by limitation of said act the time of redemption of said lands has expired; and whereas, in accordance with instructions issued by President Lincoln on [September 16, 1863] to the United States direct tax commissioners of South Carolina, certain lands bid in by the United States in the parish of St. Helena, in said State, were in part sold by the said tax commissioners to "heads of families of the African race," in parcels of not more than twenty acres to each purchaser; and whereas, under the said instructions, the said tax commissioners did also set apart as "school farms" certain parcels of land in said parish, numbered on their plats from one to thirty-three inclusive, making an aggregate of six thousand acres, more or less: Therefore, be it further enacted, That the sales made to "heads of families of the African race," under the instructions of President Lincoln to the United States direct tax commissioners for South Carolina, . . . are hereby confirmed and established; and all leases which have been made to such "heads of families" by said direct tax commissioners, shall be changed into certificates of sale in all cases wherein the lease provides for such substitution; and all the lands now remaining unsold, which come within the same designation, being eight thousand acres, more or less, shall be disposed of according to said instructions.

Sec. 7. . . All other lands bid in by the United States at tax sales, being thirty-eight thousand acres, more or less, and now in the hands of the said tax commissioners as the property of the United States, in the parishes of St. Helena and St. Luke, excepting the "school farms," as specified in the preceding section, and so much as may be necessary for military and naval purposes at Hilton Head, Bay Point, and Land's End, and excepting also the city of Port Royal on St. Helena island, and the town of Beaufort, shall be disposed of in parcels of twenty acres, at one dollar and fifty cents per acre, to such persons, and to such only, as have acquired and are now occupying lands under and agreeably to the provisions of General Sherman's special field order, dated at Savannah, Georgia, [January 16, 1865] and the remaining lands, if any, shall be disposed of in like manner to such persons as had acquired lands agreeably to the said order of General Sherman but who have been dispossessed by the restoration of the same to former owners: Provided, That the lands sold in compliance with the provisions of this and the preceding section shall not be alienated by their purchasers within six years from and after the passage of this act.

Sec. 8. . . The "school farms" . . . shall be sold, . . . and the proceeds of said sales . . . shall be invested in United States bonds, the interest of which shall be appropriated, under the direction of the Commissioner, to the support of schools, without distinction of color or race, on the islands in the parishes of St. Helena and St. Luke.

Sec. 9. . . The assistant commissioners for South Carolina and Georgia are hereby authorized to examine all claims to lands in their respective States which are claimed under the provisions of General Sherman's special field order, and to give each person having a valid claim a warrant upon the direct tax commissioners for South Carolina for twenty acres of land; and the said direct tax commissioners shall issue to every person, or to his or her heirs, but in no case to any assigns, presenting such warrant, a lease of twenty acres of land, as provided for in section seven, for the term of six years; but at any time thereafter, upon the payment of a sum not exceeding one dollar and fifty cents per acre, the person holding such lease shall be entitled to a certificate of sale of said tract of twenty acres from the direct tax commissioner or such officer as may be authorized to issue the same; but no warrant shall be held valid longer than two years after the issue of the same.

Sec. 10. . . The tax commissioners for South Carolina are hereby authorized and required, at the earliest day practicable, to survey the lands designated in section seven into lots of twenty acres each, with proper metes and bounds distinctly marked, so that the several tracts shall be convenient in form, and as near as practicable have an average of fertility and woodland. . .

Sec. 11. . . Restoration of lands occupied by freedmen under General Sherman's field order dated at Savannah, Georgia, [January 16, 1865] shall not be made until after the crops of the present year shall have been gathered by the occupants of said lands, nor until a fair compensation shall have been made to them by the former owners of such lands, or their legal representatives, for all improvements or betterments erected or constructed thereon, and after due notice of the same being done shall have been given by the assistant commissioner.

Sec. 12. . . The Commissioner shall have power to seize, hold, use, lease, or sell all buildings, and tenements, and any lands appertaining to the same, or otherwise, formerly held under color of title by the late so-called Confederate States, and not heretofore disposed of by the United States, and any buildings or lands held in trust for the same by any person or persons, and to use the same or appropriate the proceeds derived therefrom to the education of the freed people; and whenever the bureau shall cease to exist, such of said so-called Confederate States as shall have made provision for the education of their citizens without distinction of color shall receive the sum remaining unexpended of such sales or rentals, which shall be distributed among said States for educational purposes in proportion to their population.

Sec. 13. . . The Commissioner of this bureau shall at all times co-operate with private benevolent associations of citizens in aid of freedmen, and with agents and teachers, duly accredited and appointed by them, and shall hire or provide by lease, buildings for purposes of education whenever such associations shall, without cost to the Government, provide suitable teachers and means of instruction; and he shall furnish such protection as may be required for the safe conduct of such schools.

Sec. 14. . . In every State or district when the ordinary course of judicial proceedings has been interrupted by the rebellion, and until the same shall be fully restored, and in every State or district whose constitutional relations to the Government have been practically discontinued by the rebellion, and until such State shall have been restored in such relations, and shall be duly represented in the Congress of the United States, the right to make and enforce contracts, to sue, be parties, and give evidence, to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold, and convey real and personal property, and to have full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings concerning personal liberty, personal security, and the acquisition, enjoyment, and disposition of estate, real and personal, including the constitutional right to bear arms, shall be secured to and enjoyed by all the citizens of such State or district without respect to race or color, or previous condition of slavery. And whenever in either of said States or districts the ordinary course of judicial proceedings has been interrupted by the rebellion, and until the same shall be fully restored, and until such State shall have been restored to its constitutional relations to the Government, and shall be duly represented in the Congress of the United States, the President shall, through the Commissioner and the officers of the bureau, and under such rules and regulations as the President, through the Secretary of War, shall prescribe, extend military protection and have military jurisdiction over all cases and questions concerning the free enjoyment of such immunities and rights; and no penalty or punishment for any violation of law shall be imposed or permitted because of race or color, or previous condition of slavery, other or greater than the penalty or punishment to which the white persons may be liable by law for the like offense. But the jurisdiction conferred by this section upon the officers of the bureau shall not exist in any State where the ordinary course of judicial proceedings has not been interrupted by the rebellion, and shall cease in every State when the courts of the State and the United States are not disturbed in the peaceable course of justice, and after such State shall be fully restored in its constitutional relations to the Government, and shall be duly represented in the Congress of the United States.

Sec. 15. . . That all officers, agents, and employees of this bureau, before entering upon the duties of their office, shall take the ["iron clad" test oath].

2. OFFICIAL REGULATIONS AND REPORTS

The Army and the Freedmen

Circular of General Schofield, commanding the Army of the Ohio and the Department of North Carolina. These are typical of the rules laid down in every Southern state by the army before the Bureau went into effect. [May 15, 1865]

THE following rules are published for the government of freedmen in North Carolina until the restoration of civil government in the State:

1. The common laws governing the domestic relations, such as those giving parents authority and control over their children, and guardians control over their wards, are in force. The parent's or guardian's authority and obligations take the place of those of the former master.

2. The former masters are constituted the guardians of minors, and of the aged and infirm, in the absence of parents or other near relatives capable of supporting them.

3. Young men and women under twenty-one years of age, remain under the control of their parents or guardians until they become of age, thus aiding to support their parents and younger brothers and sisters.

4. The former masters of freedmen may not turn away the young or the infirm, nor refuse to give them food and shelter; nor may the able-bodied men or women go away from their homes, or live in idleness, and leave their parents, children, or young brothers and sisters to be supported by others.

5. Persons of age, who are free from any of the obligations referred to above, are at liberty to find new homes wherever they can obtain proper employment; but they will not be supported by the Government, nor by their former masters, unless they work.

6. It will be left to the employer and servant to agree upon the wages to be paid; but freedmen are advised that for the present season they ought to expect only moderate wages, and where their employers cannot pay them money they ought to be contented with a fair share of the crops to be raised. They have gained their personal freedom. By industry and good conduct they may rise to independence and wealth.

7. All officers, soldiers, and citizens are requested to give publicity to the rules, and to instruct the freed people as to their new rights and obligations.

8. All officers of the army, and of the county police companies, are authorized and required to correct any violation of the above rules within their jurisdiction.

9. Each district commander will appoint a superintendent of freedmen (a commissioned officer), with such number of assistants (officers and non-commissioned officers) as may be necessary, whose duty it will be to take charge of all the freed people in his district who are without homes or proper employment. The superintendents will send back to their homes all who have left them in violation of the above rules, and will endeavor to find homes and suitable employment for all others. They will provide suitable camps or quarters for such as cannot be otherwise provided for, and attend to their discipline, police, subsistence, etc.

10. The superintendents will hear all complaints of guardians or wards, and report the facts to their district commanders, who are authorized to dissolve the existing relations of guardian and ward in any case which may seem to require it, and to direct the superintendent to otherwise provide for the wards, in accordance with the above rules.

Rules and Regulations for Assistant Commissioners

House Ex. Doc. no. 11, 39 Cong., 1 Sess., p. 45. Howard's regulations. Approved June 2, 1865, by President Johnson. [May 30, 1865]

I. The headquarters of the Assistant Commissioners will, for the present, be established as follows, viz: for Virginia, at Richmond, Va.; for North Carolina, at Raleigh, N. C.; for South Carolina and Georgia, at Beaufort, S. C.; for Alabama, at Montgomery, Ala.; for Kentucky and Tennessee, at Nashville, Tenn.; for Missouri and Arkansas, at St. Louis, Mo.; for Mississippi, at Vicksburg, Miss.; for Louisiana, at New Orleans, La.; for Florida, at Jacksonville, Fla. . .

III. Relief establishments will be discontinued as speedily as the cessation of hostilities and the return of industrial pursuits will permit. Great discrimination will be observed in administering relief, so as to include none that are not absolutely necessitous and destitute.

IV. Every effort will be made to render the people self-supporting. Government supplies will only be temporarily issued to enable destitute persons speedily to support themselves, and exact accounts must be kept with each individual or community, and held as a lien upon their crops. . . The commissioners are especially to remember that their duties are to enforce, with reference to these classes, the laws of the United States.

V. Loyal refugees, who have been driven from their homes will, on their return, be protected from abuse, and the calamities of their situation relieved as far as possible. If destitute, they will be aided with transportation, and food when deemed expedient, while in transitu, returning to their former homes. . .

VII. In all places where there is an interruption of civil law, or in which local courts, by reason of old codes, in violation of the freedom guaranteed by the proclamation of the President and laws of Congress, disregard the negro's right to justice before the laws in not allowing him to give testimony, the control of all subjects relating to refugees and freedmen being committed to this bureau, the Assistant Commissioners will adjudicate, either themselves or through officers of their appointment, all difficulties arising between negroes themselves, or between negroes and whites or Indians, except those in military service, so far as recognizable by military authority, and not taken cognizance of by the other tribunals, civil or military, of the United States.

VIII. Negroes must be free to choose their own employers, and be paid for their labor. Agreements should be free, bona fide acts, approved by proper officers, and their inviolability enforced on both parties. The old system of overseers, tending to compulsory unpaid labor and acts of cruelty and oppression is prohibited. The unity of families, and all the rights of the family relation, will be carefully guarded. In places where the local statutes make no provisions for the marriage of persons of color, the Assistant Commissioners are authorized to designate officers who shall keep a record of marriages, which may be solemnized by any ordained minister of the gospel, who shall make a return of the same, with such items as may be required for registration at places designated by the Assistant Commissioner. Registrations already made by the United States officers will be carefully preserved.

IX. Assistant Commissioners will instruct their receiving and disbursing officers to make requisitions upon all officers, civil or military, in charge of funds, abandoned lands, &c., within their respective territories, to turn over the same in accordance with the orders of the President. They will direct their medical officers to ascertain the facts and necessities connected with the medical treatment and sanitary condition of refugees and freedmen. They will instruct their teachers to collect the facts in reference to the progress of the work of education, and aid it with as few changes as possible to the close of the present season. During the school vacations of the hot months, special attention will be given to the provision for the next year.

X. Assistant Commissioners will aid refugees and freedmen in securing titles to land according to law. This may be done for them as individuals or by encouraging joint companies.

Instructions to Assistant Commissioners

House Ex. Doc. no. 11, 39 Cong., 1 Sess., p. 49. Circular instructions sent out by General Howard. [July 12, 1865]

EACH Assistant Commissioner will be careful, in the establishment of sub-districts, to have the office of his agent at some point easy of access for the people of the sub-district.

He will have at least one agent, either a citizen, military officer, or enlisted man, in each sub-district. This agent must be thoroughly instructed in his duties. He will be furnished with the proper blanks for contracts, and will institute methods adequate to meet the wants of his district in accordance with the rules of this bureau. No fixed rates of wages will be prescribed for a district, but in order to regulate fair wages in given individual cases the agent should have in mind minimum rates for his own guidance. By careful inquiry as to the hire of an able-bodied man when the pay went to the master, he will have an approximate test of the value of labor. He must of course consider the entire change of circumstances, and be sure that the laborer has due protection against avarice and extortion. Wages had better be secured by a lien on the crops or land. Employers are desired to enter into written agreements with employes, setting forth stated wages, or securing an interest in the land or crop, or both. All such agreements will be approved by the nearest agent, and a duplicate filed in his office. . .

In order to enforce the fulfilment of contracts on both contracting parties, the Commissioner of the bureau lays down no general rule — the Assistant Commissioner must use the privileges and authority he already has. Provost courts, military commissions, local courts, where the freedmen and refugees have equal rights with other people, are open to his use. In the great majority of cases his own arbitrament, or that of his agent, or the settlement by referees, will be sufficient.

No Assistant Commissioner, or agent, is authorized to tolerate compulsory unpaid labor, except for the legal punishment of crime. Suffering may result to some extent, but suffering is preferred to slavery, and is to some degree the necessary consequence of events.

In all actions the officer should never forget that no substitute for slavery, like apprenticeship without proper consent, or peonage, (i. e., either holding the people by debt, or confining them, without consent, to the land by any system,) will be tolerated.

The Assistant Commissioner will designate one or more of his agents to act as the general superintendent of schools (one for each State) for refugees and freedmen. This officer will work as much as possible in conjunction with State officers who may have school matters in charge. If a general system can be adopted for a State, it is well; but if not, he will at least take cognizance of all that is being done to educate refugees and freedmen, secure proper protection to schools and teachers, promote method and efficiency, correspond with the benevolent agencies which are supplying his field, and aid the Assistant Commissioner in making his required reports. . .

All public addresses of a character calculated to create discontent are reprehensible; but the Assistant Commissioner and his agents must explain, by constant recapitulation, the principles, laws, and regulations of this bureau to all parties concerned. It is recommended to the Assistant Commissioners to draw up in writing a careful summary to be publicly and privately read by agents throughout their respective districts.

The Bureau and the Laws of the States

letter to assistant commissioners. [October 4, 1865]

STATE laws with regard to apprenticeship will be recognized by this bureau, provided they make no distinction of color; or in case they do so, the said laws applying to white children will be extended to the colored.

Officers of this bureau are regarded as guardians of orphans and minors of freedmen within their respective districts.

The principle to be adhered to with regard to paupers is, that each county, parish, township, or City shall care for and provide for its own poor.

Vagrant laws made for free people and now in force on the statute-books of the States embraced in the operations of this bureau, will be recognized and extended to the freedmen.

Regulation of Labor Contracts

House Ex. Doc. no. 70, 39 Cong., 1 Sess., p. 30. Issued by General
A. Baird, New Orleans, Louisiana. [December 4, 1865]

I. . . ALL contracts for labor should be made in triplicate, and should be approved by the agent of this bureau for the parish in which the parties reside; one copy to be retained by the employer, and the other two copies sent to this office — one to be forwarded to Washington.

Contracts made otherwise than as thus prescribed will not be regarded as binding by the Bureau, nor as meriting its interference to enforce them, unless for the protection of the laborer.

II. As far as practicable, all members of the same family should contract conjointly for their labor, so that the number of useful hands and the number of the infirm who have to be supported may be regarded in fixing the rate of pay. The labor of minor children to be contracted for by their parents or guardian, and, in the absence of either, by the agent of this bureau. . .

IV. Twenty-six days of ten hours each in summer, and nine hours in winter, between the hours of daylight and dark, shall be considered a month.

V. Any work in excess of this will be considered as extra labor, and six hours will be considered as an equivalent for a day's work, and fractional parts of the six hours will be paid for at the same rate.

VI. Laborers working extra time will be allowed a half ration extra for each and every six hour's labor performed.

VII. In addition to the monthly wages paid to laborers, good and wholesome rations, comfortable clothing and quarters, medical attendance and just treatment, and the opportunity for instruction of children will be furnished free of charge; but the rations, clothing and quarters, fuel, and all other privileges granted by the employer, are part of the consideration which he pays for the services of the laborer, and are as really and fully wages as the money contracted to be paid, and are always taken into account in fixing the amount of money wages to be paid.

VIII. The Sabbath day being set apart for the worship of God, no laborer will be required to perform any work on that day, except works of necessity or mercy.

IX. The ration furnished to laborers shall be as follows: One peck of corn meal and five pounds of pork or bacon per week, and the money value of this ration will be taken into the account in fixing the rate of wages to be paid.

X. The allowance of clothing will be two summer and one winter suit for each laborer or member of the family, or clothing may be commuted at the rate of three dollars per month for first-class hands, two and one-half dollars per month for second and third class hands, and one and one-half dollar per month for children, at the option of the laborer.

XI. Quarters shall be such as to protect the laborer and his family from the inclemency of the weather, and must contain accommodations for cooking, and, in addition, one-half acre of land, contiguous to the houses, will be set apart for each family for garden purposes.

XII. Should the contracting parties prefer it, the laborers can engage to furnish their own food and clothing, their wages to be regulated accordingly. These supplies may be purchased from the employer, who must, if he undertakes to supply his hands, in all cases, keep a regular book account for each hand, and sell at usual market rates, which accounts must be open at all times to the inspection of the agents of this bureau. This mode of contract is recommended to the freedmen. Should they desire to contract for a certain portion of the crop, they can do so, and the employer, in all contracts of this kind, will be required to comply with section XVII of this circular, and also to pay over to the agent of this bureau one-twentieth of the value of the laborer's share of said crop monthly, or whenever demanded, for school purposes; this estimate to be based on the average production of the land under cultivation.

XIII. Five per cent. of the monthly wages of the laborers will be retained in the hands of the employer, and paid over, when demanded, to the agent authorized to receive it, to be used for the purpose of sustaining schools for the education of the children of the freedmen, and for no other purpose; and if not demanded for the purpose designated during the year, the amount so retained will be paid over to the laborer at the settlement of his account. One-half of the balance of the monthly wages will be paid to the laborer on the last day of each month, and the remaining one-half will be retained by the employer until the contract is fulfilled, when it will be paid over to the laborer.

XIV. Should the laborer refuse to do the work contracted for, or should he leave the plantation or place on which, or employer for whom, he has engaged to work, for the purpose of avoiding labor, without just cause or provocation, which will be determined by the agent of the bureau for the parish in which he resides, upon application — and failure to make application for redress by the laborer will be considered as prima facie evidence against him — he shall forfeit all wages that may be due him at the time of leaving to his employer; and should he refuse after having voluntarily entered into an agreement to labor, or fail to comply with, and be governed by, such ordinary and reasonable rules as may be adopted by his employer for the systematic carrying on of his business, or fail in any way to be a good and faithful laborer, according to his contract, or be wanting in due respect and obedience to his employer or his family, in the performance of his or their duties, he may be discharged, and obliged to remove his family from the premises of his employer. . . . For failure to be at the appointed place of labor at the usual hour of commencing work, unless in case of sickness, the employer may deduct twice the amount of money wages for the time lost, to compensate for clothing and rations, as well as lost time.

XV. Planters and others employing labor will, when the nature of their business requires that work be performed at night and on Sundays, during certain periods, distinctly specify in the contract that the employes agree to do such work at such times as it may be required — the consideration for which must be distinctly stated in the agreement.

XVI. No restraints or disabilities shall be imposed upon freedmen that are not imposed upon white men. . . .

XVII. Should the agent deem it necessary, he will require the employer to give security that the requisite amount of provision to furnish the laborers with the specified ration shall be on hand on the plantation from month to month for issue or sale to the laborers and their families, as the terms of their contract may require. The rations and clothing specified in the order will be the minimum that will be regarded by the bureau as sufficient food and comfortable clothing.

XVIII. Employers can adopt rules for systematizing the work on their plantations or elsewhere, which rules and regulations shall be read in the presence of the laborers previous to contracting, and which, if assented to, shall be made part of the agreement, and be binding upon both parties. And the parties may agree upon a system of fines for violation of these rules, which fines shall constitute a fund to be distributed among the laborers who have not been delinquent; and in case there are none such, to be paid over to the agent of this bureau to be applied to the support of the freedmen's school.

XIX. All crops and property on any plantation where laborers are employed will be held to be covered by a lien against all other creditors to the extent of the wages due employes, and such lien will follow such crops and property in any and all hands until such labor is fully paid and satisfied.

XX. For the purpose of reimbursing to the United States some portion of the expenses of this system, and of supporting the aged, infirm, and helpless, the following tax will be collected:

For each planter, for every hand employed by him between the ages of eighteen and fifty, one dollar per annum.

Advice to Texas Planters

House Ex. Doc. no. 70, 39 Cong., 1 Sess., p. 147. General E. M. Gregory's circular No. 1, Galveston. [October 12, 1865]

EVERY just encouragement will be rendered the planter to assist him to adapt himself to the new condition of labor. It is essential for his success to accord to the negro all the rights of a freedman, and to meet him in the true spirit of justice and kindness; then there will be no difficulty to control the labor. The day of the lash and corporeal punishment is past, and must give way to law and moral power; man must learn to govern himself before he can expect to govern others; let every one practically realize that slavery is dead, past resurrection, and adverse to the spirit of the age and the decrees of a free people; therefore, let no man be deceived.

Advice to White and Black

House Ex. Doc. no 70, 39 Cong., 1 Sess., p. 154. Colonel Samuel Thomas's circular No. 7. Vicksburg, Mississippi. Colonel Thomas as issued many long circulars of advice. [July 29, 1865]

I. The officers of the Freedmen's Bureau in the State of Mississippi will use all practicable means to make known the contents of this circular to the freed people under their care. Meetings of the colored people are recommended, at which the circular may be read and explained. Copies of it ought to be placed in the hands of intelligent preachers and other colored men, who will assist in making it known. The aid of teachers and other friends of the colored people may be secured.

II. By the proclamation of the President sanctioned by Congress the colored people are free. The result of the war, in which so many colored men have taken an honorable part, confirms their freedom. If in any place they are still held and treated as slaves, it is an outrage. To prevent such a wrong, and to secure to them protection the Bureau of Freedmen has been established, and its officers placed throughout the district. All colored people have a right and are invited to go to these officers for advice and protection whenever they think themselves wronged. The officers ask for the confidence of the colored people. Whenever the State laws and courts do not do justice to the colored man, by refusing the testimony of colored witnesses, or in any other way, the freed people must apply to the nearest officer of the Bureau; he will tell what is to be done in each case. The freedmen must not attempt to take the law into their own hands, or to right themselves by any kind of violence, carrying off property, or the like. White men will sometimes trespass upon a black man's rights or commit acts of personal violence, and then try to shield themselves under the plea that there is nothing but negro testimony against them. The officers of the Bureau have power to take up all such cases, and to admit the negro testimony, and the colored people must seek their remedy by going to these officers. . .

IV. They who have come out of slavery must exercise patience. No great change like that from slavery to freedom can be made to work perfectly at once. They must remember that they cannot have rights without duties. Freedom does not mean the right to live without work at other people's expense, but means that each man shall enjoy the fair fruit of his labor. A man who can work has no right to a support by government or by charity. The issue of rations to colored people by the government during the war was an act of humanity, because they were driven from their work, forsaken by their old masters, and left without food. This is not the case now. The means and opportunity to make a respectable living are within the reach of every colored man in this State. No really respectable person wishes to be supported by others. Let each one patiently do what is right, and then it will be easy to secure them what is right from others. Many say the negro will never work except as a slave. The negro has it within his power to contradict this saying most effectually. Let him work, and his rights will soon be secure.

V. The colored people have behaved, in some respects, remarkably well. They have not, in more than a few instances, shown spite toward their late owners. It is far better that they should not. They can lose nothing by treating them respectfully. Where they have been well treated, and their late owners are disposed to give them their old quarters and fair wages, it will often be best for them to continue at the old place. A good master is likely to prove a good employer, and is to be treated with respect and affection. Where they know a white man to be tyrannical and unjust they will naturally avoid him, which they have a clear right to do. But this is all they need to do. They must not go back to take revenge for the past. Leave the unjust and violent white man to suffer for want of laborers; that is enough.

VI. The freed people must have schools. If they are not educated they will be at a constant disadvantage with white men. Where we have had schools it has been proved that the colored children can learn easily. Teachers will be sent to every place where they can be protected and sustained. But the government will not pay the teachers, and the benevolence of the north may not be able to support so many as will be needed. The colored people ought to aid. . . . If they prefer it at any place, they might agree to be taxed according to their incomes, and take measures, in consultation with the officers of the bureau, to collect the tax themselves, and pay it over to the officers, who will use it for the schools and give account to all concerned.

VII. Regular lawful marriage is a most important thing. No people can ever be good and great, nor even respectable, if the men and women, "take up together" without being married, and change from one to another and quarrel and part whenever the fancy takes them. Sin and shame of this class always destroys a people if not repented of. If slavery caused a bad state of things in this respect among the colored people, freedom ought to produce a better. Let the evils of slavery die with it. Regularly ordained colored ministers, who have so much education that they can make the certificate of marriage properly, may be authorized to solemnize marriage. All white ministers, qualified and willing, may have the same authority. And where there are no such ministers within reach, the commissioned officers of the Freedmen's Bureau can officiate. The people who have lived together without being married ought to come up and be married, for the sake of example. Let no woman consent to live with a man at all who will not at once marry her. Unfaithfulness to the marriage relation is such a sin and shame that it ought not to be heard of among free people. When such cases occur the parties against whom offenses are committed should complain to the officers of the bureau. If they do not do it, the colored preachers, and any persons who desire order and purity to prevail, ought to bring such cases to the notice of the officers.

VIII. By the blessing of God a great deal may be done to establish justice, to enlighten and raise the people, and to secure the welfare of all classes in this State, if all will cooperate in the work. The freed people ought themselves to aid the officers in every way. It is their duty to do so. They owe it to the government, that has freed them and called this whole organization into existence for their benefit and protection, to do all in their power for its success. Let them be industrious and frugal. Slavery has not taught them economy, but, on the contrary, has tended to make them extravagant and thoughtless. Having had no interest in the success of labor, the preservation of property, or even the care of their own persons, they have contracted habits in many cases which, if not corrected, will degrade and ruin them. The dress, habits, language, and thoughts of slavery must be thrown off. That which was forced upon them in slavery does not become them now. Let them act their part well, work for their living, and avoid all wrong courses, and all will be well.

The Bureau in Louisiana

House Ex. Doc. no. 70, 39 Cong., 1 Sess., pp. 394, 395, 402. Report of Gen. J. S. Fullerton who succeeded Chaplain T. W. Conway as assistant commissioner in Louisiana. [December 2, 1865]

ON the part of some agents there has been a want of tact, conciliation, and sound judgment. Their prejudices so blinded them that they could not properly approach the people with whom they had to deal, and it appears as though they went to the south to foster disunion, rather than to cure and heal. In many cases they have produced inveterate enmity between the whites and the blacks, instead of bringing about the good understanding and respect that their mutual interests require.

They would listen to the story or complaint of the black man alone, refusing to hear his white neighbor on the same subject, or if they did listen, with the determination not to believe. . .

I thought it to be of the utmost importance that the freedmen should work during the coming year, not only for their own benefit, but for the good of the planters and the country at large. It is also necessary that they should do so in order to give the denial to the prophecy of those friends of slavery who continually insist that the negro will not work if free. . . Many of the freedmen having been thus plainly informed of what is expected of them, soon showed a disposition to work under contracts for the next year, and the planters, acting under the belief that the evil complained of would, in a great measure, no longer exist, at once commenced to engage their services. The scarcity of labor and the large profits that can be made on the crops of Louisiana have caused a great demand for labor in that State. All of the able-bodied freedmen, if they will consent to work can obtain employment at good wages, and there will still be room for many more laborers. Many planters called on me during the last week of my stay in the State to obtain information as to how and where they could obtain hands, and offered for them good inducements. Some went to Texas and some to Mississippi [for hands].

In my administration of freedmen's affairs in Louisiana I acted upon the broad democratic idea that there should be the same code of laws for all; that every exceptional law or regulation for the black man is but a recognition of the spirit of slavery. The steps that I took were necessary to annihilate the distinction of that caste which sprung from slavery. Laws of the State made to govern the white man, while the freedman was in a state of slavery, surely could not be too hard upon him when freed and admitted to the benefits and penalties of the same. But there were men who had such a tender regard for the freedmen, that while they were willing that they should accept the benefits of State laws, cried down as an outrage any attempt to render him liable to the penalties of the same. Thus when I attempted to show officially that the freedmen could be arrested as vagrants, or apprenticed, in accordance with the laws that were equally binding upon all free persons, these men were ready to express great indignation at the wickedness and enormity of such proceedings. The idea was constantly held out to the freedmen that they were a privileged people, to be pampered and petted by the government, and the effect was most pernicious. It not only gave them expectations that could not be realized, but prevented them from securing civil rights that the laws of the State conferred upon them. It also appeared to me that there was not a sufficient effort made in this State to harmonize capital and labor. The acts of a few local agents of the bureau were such as to destroy the confidence that should exist between these planters who were endeavoring to give free labor an impartial trial, and the freedmen who worked in their fields. These acts were done through a mistaken notion of kindness to the blacks. . .

There is not . . . an able-bodied man who cannot get employment and good wages. The planters of the State are very desirous of restoring their fortunes by cultivating the fields. Large profits can be made on the staple crops, and for this reason they can give good wages. The freedmen generally know this fact, and will not, therefore, work for a pittance. More than a majority of them obtained employment last year when but a small portion of the fields were cultivated, and we have but to consider the fact that the most of the planters now desire to raise sugar and cotton to form a judgment of the demand for labor for the coming year. Before the war four hundred thousand hogsheads of sugar and an equal number of barrels of molasses were made in Louisiana. . .

There is a growing disposition on the part of the planters to act justly and fairly toward the freedmen, and to secure to them the exercise of their legal rights. . . They are also showing a disposition to accord the freedmen those opportunities of educating their children which they have not heretofore possessed, for it is becoming evident to them that free labor flourishes best in those places where schools abound. The enmity against the black race in the south comes principally from the poor whites. For those of them who do work fear the competition of black labor, and nearly all of them, having before them the fear of "negro equality," do what they can to oppose their freedom, and the working of the free labor system. But the war has not left enough of this class in Louisiana to exert any considerable influence.

It is not true that there are great numbers of freedmen being murdered by the whites in Louisiana. During the month that I remained in the State but one case of this kind was presented to the bureau. . . This was the case of a freedman who had been shot and wounded by a white man, and the offender when arrested claimed that the freedman had first fired at him.

That there are many cases of outrage that are never heard of is most true, but from all that I have learned, I do not believe that society in this respect is more demoralized at present in Louisiana than in some States further north. . . . By telling only the bad acts that have been committed, and giving these as an index of society, any large community could be pictured as barbarous.

Report of General Grant

Senate Ex. Doc. no. 2, 39 Cong., 1 Sess., p. 117. General Grant's letter to President Johnson, after a trip through the South.

[December 18, 1865]

I DID not give the operations of the Freedmen's Bureau that attention I would have done if more time had been at my disposal. Conversations on the subject, however, with officers connected with the bureau lead me to think that in some of the States its affairs have not been conducted with good judgment or economy, and that the belief, widely spread among the freedmen of the Southern States, that the lands of their former owners will, at least in part, be divided among them, has come from the agents of this bureau. This belief is seriously interfering with the willingness of the freedmen to make contracts for the coming year. In some form the Freedmen's Bureau is an absolute necessity until civil law is established and enforced, securing to the freedmen their rights and full protection. At present, however, it is independent of the military establishment of the country, and seems to be operated by the different agents of the bureau according to their individual notions. Everywhere General Howard, the able head of the bureau, made friends by the just and fair instructions and advice he gave; but the complaint in South Carolina was, that when he left things went on as before. Many, perhaps a majority, of the agents of the Freedmen's Bureau advise the freedmen that by their own industry they must expect to live. To this end they endeavor to secure employment for them, and to see that both contracting parties comply with their engagements. In some instances, I am sorry to say, the freedman's mind does not seem to be disabused of the idea that a freedman has the right to live without care or provision for the future. The effect of the belief in division of lands is idleness and accumulation in camps, towns, and cities. In such cases I think it will be found that vice and disease will tend to the extermination, or great reduction of the colored race. It cannot be expected that the opinions held by men at the South for years can be changed in a day; and therefore the freedmen require for a few years not only laws to protect them, but the fostering care of those who will give them good counsel, and in whom they can rely.

The Freedmen's Bureau, being separated from the military establishment of the country, requires all the expense of a separate organization. One does not necessarily know what the other is doing, or what orders they are acting under. It seems to me this could be corrected by regarding every officer on duty with troops in the Southern States as agents of the Freedmen's Bureau, and then have all orders from the head of the bureau sent through department commanders. This would create a responsibility that would secure uniformity of action throughout all the South; would insure the orders and instructions from the head of the bureau being carried out; and would relieve from duty and pay a large number of employes of the Government.

Jealousy of the Army

Senate Ex. Doc. no. 27. 39 Cong., 1 Sess., p. 87. Report of Gen. Davis Tillson, assistant commissioner for Georgia, to Gen. O. O. Howard, commissioner. [December 29, 1865]

I HAVE read General Grant's recent report very carefully, and particularly that portion of it referring to the bureau; I also notice in the papers an article stating that your orders and all military matters are under the control of the department commanders, and that assistant commissioners are required to keep department commanders informed of all they are doing, and obtain their approval to the instructions and orders issued by them. I take it for granted that this is to some degree a mistake; it is not only proper, but necessary, that the assistant commissioners should keep the department commanders informed of all they are or intend doing, that they furnish them with copies of all their orders, circulars, etc., and that they abstain from any interference whatever with military matters, which are of course solely under the control of the department commander; but if assistant commissioners must secure the approval by the department commander of all their instructions or orders, then you lose all the advantage which you have gained by selecting officers who have some fitness for the duties to which they are assigned, and leave assistant commissioners simply the power to record the will of the department commander, who may or may not be competent to deal with the intricate and delicate questions the bureau is expected to solve. You deprive officers of the bureau of all real authority, and with it the little respect heretofore shown their orders, and make it possible for the people to evade the requirements of the bureau by skillfully flattering military commanders, a majority of whom, experience justifies me in saying, regard the bureau and the negro with indifference and contempt. They may know how to make war, but they may not know how to make peace, and may have none of that good temper and delicate tact and skill required in dealing with the people in their present condition so as to produce the results desired by the government.

If General Grant's suggestion is to be adopted, and all officers on duty in the south are to be indiscriminately regarded as officers of the bureau, then, as the past has shown, very many of them will be found simply able to play the part of the "bull in the china shop," and will be found utterly wanting in that proper knowledge and thoughtful discretion which is quite as necessary as the disposition to obey orders.

The Fate of the "Old Time Southerner"

House Ex. Doc. no. 70, 39 Cong., 1 Sess., pp. 322. From a letter of Gen. Davis Tillson, assistant commissioner for Georgia, to Gen. O. O. Howard. [January 23, 1866]

THE fact is becoming more and more evident that hereafter labor and not cotton is to be king. . . . If the government will only continue to stand by the freed people in their just rights simply, then, by the operations of laws infinitely more potential and certain in their execution than those of Congress, the negro is to be master of the situation, and those who in times past practiced cruelty upon him, or who now hate, despise, and defame him, are to be a financially ruined people. To-day the men who have been cruel to their slaves cannot hire freed people to work for them at any price. Fortunes in the future are for those only whom the freed people can trust and for whom they will work — not for the proud and haughty owner of land merely. Land, good land, will be plenty, a drug in the market; labor will be the difficult thing to obtain, and the friends of the freed people, especially the northern man, can alone command it. Entre nous, I think I see the end, and I predict that Providence is not done dealing with this people. I believe their hate, cruelty, and malice are yet to bear more and very bitter fruit, and that by natural and irresistible laws the old-time southerner is to become entirely harmless in his impotent rage, or extinct.

Dislike of the Bureau in Kentucky

House Ex. Doc. no. 70, 39 Cong., 1 Sess., pp. 230, 238. The Bureau was intensely disliked in Kentucky where slavery was not abolished until December, 1865, by the Thirteenth Amendment. The following report is from Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, assistant commissioner for Kentucky. [January 6, 1866]

THERE are some of the meanest unsubjected and unreconstructed rascally rebellious revolutionists in Kentucky that curse the soil of the country. They claim now that although the amendment to the Constitution forever abolishing and prohibiting slavery has been ratified, and proclamation thereof duly made, yet Congress must legislate to carry the amendment into effect, and therefore slavery is not dead in Kentucky. Others cling to the old barbarism with tenacity, claiming that the government must pay Kentucky for her emancipated slaves. There are a few public journals in the State which afford great comfort to the malcontents, but the majority of the people of Kentucky hail the dawn of universal liberty, and welcome the agency of the bureau in adjusting the new relations arising from the total abolition of slavery. . .

I have been denounced in the Kentucky legislature as a liar and slanderer. A committee has been appointed to investigate the matter. . . I have good reason for believing that the committee will simply make a report that General Fisk is a great liar, and should be removed from office, etc. It is well to remember that a more select number of vindictive, pro-slavery, rebellious legislators cannot be found than a majority of the Kentucky legislature. The President of the United States was denounced in the senate as a worse traitor than Jefferson Davis, and that, too, before the bureau tempest had reached them. The entire opposition is political, a warfare waged against loyalty, freedom, and justice.

Bureau Courts in Georgia

Senate Ex. Doc. no. 2, 39 Cong., 2 Sess., p. 54. Report of Gen. Davis Tillson. [November 1, 1866]

ON assuming command of the department, Major General Steadman found the bureau courts acting in a manner so illegal and oppressive, and creating so much well-founded opposition to the government, that he was constrained to abolish them and require all cases to be adjudicated before provost courts or military commissions. After the appointment of civil agents of the bureau, the department commander ordered that all cases involving the rights of the freedmen should go before them, except cases exceeding their jurisdiction, which should be tried before a military commission. This system was found to produce most satisfactory results. . .

Much of the harmony and co-operation which have since happily existed between the civil authorities and the officers and agents of the bureau, is attributable to the wise and conciliatory action of the convention [1865], and to the influence of the members upon their return to their homes. Through the Hon. H. V. Johnson, president of the convention, I requested the members upon their return home to advise with the leading planters and more intelligent freedmen of their several counties, select responsible gentlemen in whom both had confidence, and forward their names to this office for appointment as civil agents of the bureau. Two hundred and forty-four agents have been thus appointed, and in a large majority of cases they have proved competent and faithful to the trust reposed in them, in not a few instances gaining a temporary unpopularity by their fearlessness in announcing and defending the rights of the freedmen. A few were found unfit for the position, and were promptly removed. Being citizens of the State, they did not encounter the prejudice felt against officers of the army, or agents from the north, and were thereby enabled more readily to secure justice to the freedmen, and to build up and foster a healthy public opinion. The few army officers who could be obtained for the duty were assigned to the more important places in the State, and instructed to place themselves in communication and co-operation with the civil agents in the counties near them.

Failure of the Colonization Plan

House Report no. 121, 41 Cong., 2 Sess., p. 486. Report of John T. Sprague, assistant commissiонер for Florida. In each Southern state several negro colonies were formed but all of them failed.

[1866]

THE colonization of freed people by themselves, in large numbers, so far as the experiment has been tried in Florida, has proved a failure. General Ely's colony, the only one of any magnitude brought to the State within the year, through want of discipline and general mismanagement, barely held together for the period of three months. No effort was spared by the bureau to give the scheme a thorough trial. Soon after the colony arrived at New Smyrna, the point of its destination, rations were furnished, and a competent bureau officer placed in charge. Already the predatory disposition of the men had filled the surrounding country with alarm; no cattle or hogs were secure for miles around; and the colony seemed in a fair way for a speedy relapse into a state of barbarism. So long as the government would supply rations there was little or no disposition to work; and it was only after the utter impracticability of the scheme became manifest that the colony was permitted to dissipate itself through the adjacent country, the able men and women for the most part obtaining good contracts for plantation labor in the counties of Marion, Sumpter and Orange. Many of the old, infirm and children were left on the original site of the colony. These continued a charge upon the bureau until a recent date.

3. CONFISCATION: "FORTY ACRES AND A MULE"

Sherman's Confiscations

War Department Archives. Special Field Order no. 15, Mil. Div. of the Mississippi. Savannah, Georgia, January 16, 1865. This order is an illustration of the general notion of the army that the races should be separated. [1865]

I. The islands from Charleston, south, the abandoned rice fields along the rivers for thirty miles back from the sea, and the country bordering the St. John's river, Florida, are reserved and set apart for the settlement of the negroes now made free by the acts of war and the proclamation of the President of the United States.

II. At Beaufort, Hilton Head, Savannah, Fernandina, St. Augustine, and Jacksonville, the blacks may remain in their chosen or accustomed vocations, but on the islands, and in the settlements hereafter to be established, no white person whatever, unless military officers and soldiers, detailed for duty, will be permitted to reside; and the sole and exclusive management of affairs will be left to the freed people themselves, subject only to the United States military authority and the acts of Congress. By the laws of war and orders of the President of the United States the negro is free, and must be dealt with as such. He cannot be subjected to conscription or forced military service, save by the written orders of the highest military authority of the department, under such regulations as the President or Congress may prescribe. Domestic servants, blacksmiths, carpenters, and other mechanics, will be free to select their own work and residence, but the young and able-bodied negroes must be encouraged to enlist as soldiers in the service of the United States, to contribute their share towards maintaining their own freedom, and securing their rights as citizens of the United States. . .

III. Whenever three respectable negroes, heads of families, shall desire to settle on lands, and shall have selected for that purpose an island or a locality clearly defined, within the limits above designated, the inspector of settlements and plantations will himself, or by such subordinate officer as he may appoint, give them a license to settle such island or district, and afford them such assistance as he can to enable them to establish a peaceable agricultural settlement. The three parties named will subdivide the land, under the supervision of the inspector, among themselves and such others as may choose to settle near them, so that each family shall have a plot of not more than forty (40) acres of tillable ground, and when it borders on some water channel, with not more than 800 feet water front, in the possession of which land the military authorities will afford them protection until such time as they can protect themselves, or until Congress shall regulate their title. The quartermaster may, on the requisition of the inspector of settlements and plantations, place at the disposal of the inspector one or more of the captured steamers, to ply between the settlements and one or more of the commercial points heretofore named in orders, to afford the settlers the opportunity to supply their necessary wants, and to sell the products of their land and labor.

IV. Whenever a negro has enlisted in the military service of the United States he may locate his family in any one of the settlements at pleasure, and acquire a homestead and all other rights and privileges of a settler, as though present in person. In like manner negroes may settle their families and engage on board the gunboats, or in fishing, or in the navigation of the inland waters, without losing any claim to land or other advantage derived from this system. But no one, unless an actual settler as above defined, or unless absent on government service, will be entitled to claim any right to land or property in any settlement by virtue of these orders.

V. In order to carry out this system of settlement, a general officer will be detailed as inspector of settlements and plantations, whose duty it shall be to visit the settlements, to regulate their police and general management, and who will furnish personally to each head of a family, subject to the approval of the President of the United States, a possessory title in writing, giving as near as possible the description of boundaries, and who shall adjust all claims or conflicts that may arise under the same, subject to the like approval, treating such titles altogether as possessory. The same general officer will also be charged with the enlistment and organization of the negro recruits, and protecting their interests while absent from their settlements, and will be governed by the rules and regulations prescribed by the War Department for such purposes.

VI. Brigadier General R. Saxton is hereby appointed inspector of settlements and plantations, and will at once enter on the performance of his duties. No change is intended or desired in the settlement now on Beaufort island, nor will any rights to property heretofore acquired be affected thereby.

The Policy of the Bureau in regard to Confiscation

War Department Archives. Circular no. 13. Freedmen's Bureau. These and other similar instructions limited the application of the President's Amnesty Proclamation of May 29, 1865. [July 28, 1865]

1st. All confiscated and abandoned lands, and other confiscated and abandoned lands that now are, or that may hereafter come, under the control of the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen and Abandoned Lands, by virtue of said acts, and sections of acts, and orders of the President, are, and shall be, set apart for the use of loyal refugees and freedmen, and so much as may be necessary assigned to them, as provided in section 4 of the act establishing the bureau. . .

2nd. All land or other property within the several insurrectionary States . . . to which the United States have, or shall have acquired title by confiscation, or sale, or otherwise, during the late rebellion, and all abandoned lands, or other abandoned property in these States, become so by the construction of section 3, act approved July 2nd, 1864, viz: "Property, real or personal, shall be regarded as abandoned when the lawful owner thereof shall be voluntarily absent therefrom, and engaged either in arms or otherwise in aiding or encouraging the rebellion," and which remains unsold or otherwise disposed of, are, and shall be, considered as under the control of the Commissioner of the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands, for the purposes hereinbefore set forth, and for the time authorized by the act establishing the bureau, and no part or parcel of said confiscated or abandoned property shall be surrendered or restored to the former owners thereof, or other claimants thereto, except such surrender or restoration be authorized by said Commissioner. . . .

5th. Assistant commissioners will, as rapidly as possible, cause accurate descriptions of all confiscated and abandoned lands, and other confiscated and abandoned property that are now, or that may hereafter come, under their control, to be made, and, besides keeping a record of such themselves, will forward monthly to the Commissioner of the bureau copies of such descriptions in the manner prescribed by circular . . . from this bureau. They will . . . select and set apart such confiscated and abandoned lands and property as may be deemed necessary for the immediate use of refugees and freedmen, the specific division of which into lots, and the rental or sale thereof, according to the law establishing the bureau, will be completed as soon as practicable and reported to the Commissioner. In the selection and setting apart of such lands and property, care will be used to take that about which there is the least doubt as to the proper custody and control of this bureau.

6th. The pardon of the President will not be understood to extend to the surrender of abandoned or confiscated property, which by law has been set apart for refugees and freedmen, or in use for the employment and general welfare of all persons within the lines of national military occupation within said insurrectionary States, formerly held as slaves, who are, or shall become free.

Freedmen Expect Lands

House Ex. Doc. no. 70, 39 Cong., 1 Sess. Extracts from reports of assistant commissioners in Virginia and Georgia.
[September 19, 1865]

REPORTS having been received at these headquarters [Virginia] that the freedmen in some parts of the State refuse to enter into just and reasonable contracts for labor, on account of the belief that the United States government will distribute lands among them, superintendents and agents of this bureau will take the earliest opportunity to explain to the freedmen that no lands will be given them by the government; that the government has but a very small quantity of land in the State — only enough to provide homes for a few families, and that this can only be secured by purchase or lease. . .

Unfortunately, there is a widespread belief among the freed people of this State [Georgia] that at Christmas there is to be a distribution of property among them, and under this impression they are refusing to make contracts for the coming year. All officers and agents of this bureau are directed, and other officers of the army throughout the State are earnestly requested, to exert themselves to convince the freed people that they are utterly mistaken, and that no such distribution will take place at Christmas, or at any other time, and to induce them to enter into contracts now, that they may not, at the end of the year, be in a condition to entail severe suffering on themselves, their families, and upon the community.

Confiscations in South Carolina

Senate Ex. Doc. no. 27, 39 Cong., 1 Sess., p. 140. Report of Gen. Rufus Saxton, assistant commissioner for South Carolina.

[December 6, 1865]

THE impression is universal among the freedmen that they are to have the abandoned and confiscated lands, in homesteads of forty acres, in January next. It is understood that previous to the termination of the late war the negroes heard from those in rebellion that it was the purpose of our government to divide up the southern plantations among them. . . Our own acts of Congress, and particularly the act creating this bureau, which was extensively circulated among them, still further strengthened them in the belief that they were to possess homesteads, and has caused a great unwillingness upon the part of the freedmen to make any contracts whatever. . .

All the officers and agents of this bureau have been instructed to do everything in their power to correct these impressions among the freedmen, and to urge them in every possible way to make contracts with their former owners; but so deep-seated a conviction has been found difficult to eradicate. . .

The question of next importance has been the status of the sea islands. By General Sherman's order . . . some forty thousand destitute freedmen, who followed in the wake of and came in with his army, were promised homes on the sea islands, and urged by myself and others to emigrate there and select them. Public meetings were called, and every exertion used by those whose duty it was to carry out the order to encourage emigration to the sea islands. The greatest success attended our efforts. . . Thousands of acres were cleared up and planted, and provisions enough were raised to provide for those who were located in season to plant, besides large quantities of sea island cotton. . .

On some of the islands the freedmen have established civil government, with constitutions and laws for the regulation of their internal affairs, with all the different departments for schools, churches, building roads, and other improvements. . . The former owners have recently been using every exertion to have these lands restored to their possession, and to secure this end promised to make such arrangements with the freedmen as to absorb their labor, and give them homes and employment on their estates. The officer detailed by yourself to restore these lands has been unable thus far to make any arrangement, nor do I believe it will be possible for him to make any satisfactory arrangement. The freedmen have their hearts set upon the possession of these islands, and nothing but that or its equivalent will satisfy them. They refuse to contract, and express a determination to leave the islands rather than do so. The efforts made by the former owners to obtain the possession of the lands have caused a great excitement among the settlers. Inasmuch as the faith of the government has been pledged to these freedmen to maintain them in the possession of their homes, and as to break its promise in the hour of its triumph is not becoming a just government . . . I would respectfully suggest that a practical solution of the whole question of lands . . . may be had by the appropriation of money by Congress to purchase the whole tract set apart by this order [of Sherman]. . .

The abandoned house of Mr. Memminger, formerly the secretary of the treasury for the so-called confederate government, was recently set apart as an asylum for the destitute colored orphans in the department.

Some Results of Sherman's Order

Sidney Andrews, The South Since the War, pp. 97, 209, 212. Andrews was traveling correspondent for the Boston Advertiser, and the Chicago Tribune.
[October 21, 1865]

THERE is among the plantation negroes a widely spread idea that land is to be given them by the Government, and this idea is at the bottom of much idleness and discontent. At Orangeburg and at Columbia, country negroes with whom I have conversed asked me, "When is de land goin' fur to be dewided?" Some of them believe that the land which they are going to have is on the coast; others believe that the plantations on which they have lived are to be divided among themselves. One of the [Constitutional] Convention delegates told me that an old negro man, who declined going away with some of the hands bound for Charleston, gave, as his reason for remaining, that "De home-house might come to me, ye see, sah, in de dewision." There is also a widely spread idea that the whites are to be driven out of the lower section of the State, and that the negroes are there to live by themselves. That so absurd ideas as these could exist I would not believe till I found them myself. This latter notion I even found in Charleston among negroes who had just come in from the back country. Other absurd notions well known to prevail are, that freedom can only be found "down-country," i. e. in the neighborhood of Charleston; that it is inseparable from the presence of the army, etc. . .

That the original intention of the government in setting apart the Sea Islands was to either give or sell them to the freedmen I sincerely believe. That the negroes were allowed to receive the impression that this was the purpose of the Government is beyond all question. That General Saxton colonized them in vast numbers on those islands, with this understanding on his part and theirs, is matter of record. If the faith of the nation was ever impliedly pledged to anything, it was to the assurance that the colored people should have a home there — as witness the famous order of General Sherman, approved by the Secretary of War, and practically indorsed for nearly nine months by all branches of the government. . . .

Three days ago [October 18, 1865] General Howard went down to Edisto Island in company with a representative of the old owners thereof. They were met at church by over two thousand freedmen, and a long and painfully interesting meeting was held. To say that the negroes were overwhelmed with sorrow and dissatisfaction is to state a fact in sober phrase. General Howard explained to them in careful and sympathetic words what he believed to be the wishes of the President, and asked them to appoint a committee to consider the terms proposed by the planters. This they did; and while the committee were in consultation, the assembly sang several of the most touching and mournful of the negro songs, and were addressed in broken and tearful words by some of their own preachers. The scarcely concealed spirit of all was that the Government had deceived them, and it required the most earnest efforts of General Howard and his associates to keep this spirit from finding stormy outbreak. The result of the conference between representative Whaley and the Freedmen's committee does not promise a speedy reconciliation of the negroes to their removal from the lands. They say that they will not, under any circumstances, work with overseers. . . . Some few of them seemed willing to work for fair wages, but the great body were anxious to rent or buy the lands, to which the planters will not consent. . . .

The planters believe that they ought to have their old estates, and they also believe that the President means that they shall have them; and hence the "fair terms" which they propose are such as will neither satisfy the freedmen nor the friends of the freedmen. The negroes, on the other hand, almost universally believe that the islands have been given to them, and they are not likely to readily relinquish that belief. . . . An attempt to force them from the islands at present, or to compel them to the acceptance of the terms proposed by the planters, will overthrow their faith in the Government, and there will be — bloodshed.

Land Certificates in Florida

John Wallace, Carpet Bag Rule in Florida, 1885, p. 39. [1865-1867]

DURING the years of 1865-67 there was much speculation among the freedmen as to what the government intended to do for them in regard to farms. . . . One Stonelake, United States Land Register at Tallahassee, appointed soon after the surrender, . . . taking advantage of the ignorance of the freedmen, issued to them thousands of land certificates purporting to convey thousands of acres of land. For each certificate the freedman was required to pay not less than five dollars, and as much more as Stonelake could extort from the more ignorant. He induced the most influential to make the first purchases, and, it was generally believed, gave them a portion of his fees to secure purchasers. The former masters warned our people against this fraud, but as Stonelake was one of the representatives of the paternal government, he was supposed by the freedmen to be incapable of fraud or deception. Many of them were led to believe that these lands consisted of their former masters' plantations, and that the certificates alone would oust the latter from possession. After showing the certificates around among his neighbors and exulting over the purchase of a plantation, he would eventually show it to his former master, who would explain the fraud, when he would rush back to Stonelake for his money, who would invent some new deception to quiet him, and explain that upon further examination of his books he found the lands were located further south. These explanations did not fully satisfy the freedmen, and they called a meeting and appointed several of their number to go down south and spy out the Promised Land. This committee expended the money raised by their confiding friends, and after an absence of several weeks in a pretended survey, reported that they saw some good lands . . . and advised the freedmen to occupy them, but as they were unable to locate the Promised Land, their advice was not followed, and the victims were left to vent their curses upon the swindler Stonelake.

Painted Pegs from Washington

Ku Klux Report. Alabama Testimony, p. 319. Statement of John G. Pierce. For years the negroes were swindled by sharpers who traded upon their belief in the future divisions of lands. [1865-1870]

I CAN tell you from what I know and have seen myself, and also from what negroes have told me, that they have been promised lands and mules — forty acres of land and a mule — on divers occasions. Many an old negro has come to me and asked me about that thing. I can illustrate it by one little thing that I saw on a visit once to Gainesville, Sumter County. At a barbecue there I saw a man who was making a speech to the negroes, telling them what good he had done for them; that he had been to Washington City and had procured from one of the Departments here certain pegs. I saw the pegs. He had about two dozen on his arm; they were painted red and blue. He said that those pegs he had obtained from here at a great expense to himself; that they had been made by the Government for the purpose of staking out the negroes' forty acres. He told the negroes that all he wanted was to have the expenses paid to him, which was about a dollar a peg. He told them that they could stick one peg down at a corner, then walk so far one way and stick another down, then walk so far another way and stick another down, till they had got the four pegs down; and that, when the four pegs were down, the negroes' forty acres would be included in that area; and all he had to say to them was, that they could stick those pegs anywhere they pleased — on anybody's land they wanted to, but not to interfere with each other; and he would advise them, in selecting the forty acres, to take half woodland and half clear; that nobody would dare to interfere with those pegs.

Sales of Striped Pegs

T. H. Ball, Clarke County (Alabama), p. 627. Such frauds were perpetrated as late as 1900. [1873]

IN 1873 . . there passed through the county a white man, supposed to be from the North, with a large bundle of little colored stakes, who called upon the freed-men and told them that the President had authorized him to distribute among them those stakes in order that they might become owners of land, and that wherever they stuck one of those stakes the land should be theirs, no matter who had owned or claimed it. They could make their own selections for their farms. The price of a stake was three dollars, but when the freed-men could not raise that amount the stake-man would sell even for one dollar. And many of the credulous and trusting colored people . . bought these little stakes, stuck them on the lands of their white neighbors, and some began to work their newly acquired plantations, with what results need not be told.

4. ESTIMATES AND OPINIONS OF THE BUREAU'S WORK

Carl Schurz Defends the Bureau

Senate Ex. Doc. no. 2, 39 Cong., 1 Sess., p. 40. From Schurz's report to the President. [1865]

THAT abuses were connected with the management of freedmen's affairs; that some of the officers of the bureau were men of more enthusiasm than discretion, and in many cases went beyond their authority; all this is certainly true. But while the southern people are always ready to expatiate upon the shortcomings of the Freedmen's Bureau, they are not so ready to recognize the services it has rendered. I feel warranted in saying that not one-half of the labor that has been done in the south this year, or will be done there next year, would have been or would be done but for the exertions of the Freedmen's Bureau. The confusion and disorder of the transition period would have been infinitely greater had not an agency interfered which possessed the confidence of the emancipated slaves; which could disabuse them of any extravagant notions and expectations and be trusted; which could administer to them good advice and be voluntarily obeyed. No other agency, except one placed there by the national government, could have wielded that moral power whose interposition was so necessary to prevent the southern society from falling at once into the chaos of a general collision between its different elements. That the success achieved by the Freedmen's Bureau is as yet very incomplete cannot be disputed. A more perfect organization and a more carefully selected personnel may be desirable; but it is doubtful whether a more suitable machinery can be devised to secure to free labor in the South that protection against disturbing influences which the nature of the situation still imperatively demands.

Dissatisfaction about Wage Regulation

Senate Ex. Doc. no. 27, 39 Cong., 1 Sess., p. 98. Augusta, Georgia, correspondence in the National Intelligencer. [January, 1866]

SOME dissatisfaction in the article of wages exists with a late circular issued, just prior to Christmas, from the headquarters of the Freedmen's Bureau in this State. This circular, while not expressly commanding any schedule of wages, suggests a tariff in such matters as, to the minds of the freed people, will doubtless be taken as equivalent to an order to that effect. These suggestions mention from $180 to $156 per annum for males, and from $96 to $120 for females . . . food and lodging, in all cases, super-added. Now, it is claimed that these rates are fully one hundred per cent. too great.

The Necessity for the Bureau

Report of the Joint Committee on Reconstruction, part iv, p. 82. Statement of Chaplain T. W. Conway. Conway had had trouble while in charge of the Bureau in Louisiana and had been removed. He made speeches over the North on conditions in the South. [1866]

I SHOULD expect in Louisiana, as in the whole southern country, that the withdrawal of the Freedmen's Bureau would be followed by a condition of anarchy and bloodshed. . . I am pained at the conviction that I have in my own mind that if the Freedmen's Bureau is withdrawn the result will be fearful in the extreme. What it has already done and is now doing in shielding these people, only incites the bitterness of their foes. They will be murdered by wholesale, and they in their turn will defend themselves. It will not be persecution merely; it will be slaughter; and I doubt whether the world has ever known the like. These southern rebels, when the power is once in their hands, will stop at nothing short of extermination. Governor Wells himself told me that he expected in ten years to see the whole colored race exterminated, and that conviction is shared very largely among the white people of the south. It has been threatened by leading men there that they would exterminate the freedmen. . . In reply I said that they could not drive the freedmen out of the nation, because, in the first place, they would not go; and for another reason, that they had no authority to drive them out; and for a third reason, that they were wanted in the south as laborers. To that they replied, that, if necessary, they would get their laborers from Europe; that white laborers would be more agreeable to them; that the negro must be gotten rid of in some way. . . I have heard it so many times, and from so many different quarters, that I believe it is a fixed determination, and that they are looking anxiously to the extermination of the whole negro race from the country. There is an agent here now, with letters from the governor of Louisiana to parties in New York, with a view of entering at once upon negotiations to secure laborers from various parts of Europe. There are other parties endeavoring to get coolies into the south, and in various places there are immense efforts to obtain white labor to supplant that of the negro. It is a part of the immense and desperate programme which they have adopted and expect to carry out within the next ten years. . . I said the negro race would be exterminated unless protected by the strong arm of the government. . . The wicked work has already commenced, and it could be shown that the policy pursued by the government is construed by the rebels as not being opposed to it.

The Bureau and the Negro Troops

Report of Joint Committee on Reconstruction, part iii, p. 134.
Statement of William L. Sharkey, provisional governor of Mississippi.

THERE is no disguising the fact that the Freedmen's Bureau and the colored troops there have done more mischief than anything else. General Howard is a very clever gentleman; but there are men in charge of the Freedmen's Bureau in Mississippi who are disposed to speculate on white and black; they encourage the black and discourage the white man. And wherever there is a negro garrison the free negroes congregate around it, and, as a matter of course, crimes and depredations are committed. I verily believe that if . . . all the troops and the Freedmen's Bureau had been withdrawn, I could have had a perfect state of order throughout the State in two weeks. The great amount of complaints originate from the localities where the negro soldiers are. I do not say that the negroes do not make good soldiers, but they encourage the congregation of freedmen around them, and from the freedmen come crime and depredations. As a general thing . . . the freedmen have gone to work; some receiving a share of the crops, and some receiving their wages. They certainly have gone to work, as a general thing in the State; and the people are buoyant and hopeful. In some parts of the State freedmen are receiving exceedingly high wages. Mr. Alcorn, my colleague in the senate, authorizes me to state that in the river counties . . . if labor could be had, a thousand freedmen could be employed at $25 a month.

A Northern Man's Opinion

Report of Joint Committee on Reconstruction, part iv, p. 148.
Statement of Stephen Powers, correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial. [1866]

IT was a necessity particularly in those months immediately following the close of the war, to secure the distribution of rations among both the refugees and freedmen, of which they stood in great need, and without which many thousands would have perished. Last fall, about the Christmas holidays, early this winter the bureau was particularly necessary, and did a great deal of good, and did admirable work in procuring situations for hundreds and thousands of negroes. . . . The bureau may make itself useful this summer and next fall [1866] in securing a proper distribution of the crops. . . . I think it would also be necessary to continue the bureau until the freedmen generally have entered into contracts for the year 1867. After that I think the necessity for the bureau will be removed. Indeed, I think the necessity for it has already passed away in the State of Tennessee, and in many portions of other States. . . . In many cases it has fallen into the hands of incompetent and speculating officers who made it a by-word, and unnecessarily obnoxious to the people of the State where it was located. . . . The bureau is particularly odious to the people of Texas. Things were in a chaotic state there generally, and the bureau as at first organized, and as continued for a great while, was rather loose in its organization, and rather irresponsible. And many things were done in Texas and Florida, also, which were unnecessarily odious to the people, and discriminating in favor of the blacks. Such things were not generally in the shape of any serious oppressions; but they were simply petty disregards of that sentiment which the southern people entertain, and for which, I think, the officers with wisdom have shown a little more charity, and thus have added to their usefulness.

Views of John Minor Botts

Report of Joint Committee on Reconstruction, part ii, p. 139.
Botts was a well known Virginia Unionist. As a rule the Unionists were hostile to the Bureau because it tended to unite the whites in one party, thus rendering political division unlikely and making the Unionist influence insignificant. [1866]

I THINK that one of the great difficulties in Virginia, in regard to the colored people, arises from the organization of the Freedmen's Bureau — not that the Freedmen's Bureau is not in itself proper, and perhaps in some localities an indispensable institution, but that it stands very greatly in need of reformation. . . I have heard of a great many difficulties and outrages which have proceeded . . . from the ignorance and fanaticism of persons connected with the Freedmen's Bureau, who do not understand anything of the true relation of the original master to the slave, and who have, in many instances, held out promises and inducements which can never be realized to the negroes, which have made them entirely indifferent to work, and sometimes ill behaved. On the other hand, there are many persons connected with the Freedmen's Bureau who have conducted themselves with great propriety; and where that has been so there has been no trouble between the whites and blacks that I know of.

“Productive only of Mischief”

Report of Joint Committee on Reconstruction, part iv, p. 134.
Statement of J. D. B. De Bow, editor of De Bow's Review, Director of the Census, 1860. [1866]

I THINK if the whole regulation of the negroes, or freedmen, were left to the people of the communities in which they live, it will be administered for the best interest of the negroes as well as of the white men. I think there is a kindly feeling on the part of the planters towards the freedmen. They are not held at all responsible for anything that has happened. They are looked upon as the innocent cause. In talking with a number of planters, I remember some of them telling me they were succeeding very well with their freedmen, having got a preacher to preach to them and a teacher to teach them, believing it was for the interest of the planter to make the negro feel reconciled; for, to lose his services as a laborer for even a few months would be very disastrous. The sentiment prevailing is, that it is for the interest of the employer to teach the negro, to educate his children, to provide a preacher for him, and to attend to his physical wants. And I may say I have not seen an exception to that feeling in the south. Leave the people to themselves, and they will manage very well. The Freedmen's Bureau, or any agency to interfere between the freedman and his former master, is only productive of mischief. There are constant appeals from one to the other and continual annoyances. It has a tendency to create dissatisfaction and disaffection on the part of the laborer, and is in every respect in its result most unfavorable to the system of industry that is now being organized under the new order of things in the South. I do not think there is any difference of opinion upon this subject.

Criticism of the Bureau not Disloyalty

Statement of Gen. John Tarbell, U. S. A. [1866]

I THINK they have well grounded complaints against the Freedmen's Bureau; and I do not think their criticisms upon that bureau are in every instance dictated by motives of disloyalty. I do not mean to say what proportion of the officers of that bureau are incompetent or corrupt, but that there are many such I have no doubt. In such districts there has been a good deal of complaint, and to a casual observer their comments might be ascribed, perhaps, to motives of disloyalty; but a more careful attention to the subject satisfied me that their complaints were well grounded in a great many cases, for in districts where they had upright, intelligent, and impartial officers of the bureau, the people expressed entire satisfaction.

They stated to me that where they had such officers, and where they had soldiers who were under good discipline, they were entirely welcome, and indeed they were glad to have their presence — in some cases approving the action of the bureau officers in punishing white men for the ill treatment of colored people, saying that the officers were perfectly right. In other districts, I am satisfied that it often occurred that bureau officers, wanting in good sense, would show a decided partiality for the colored people, without regard to justice. I am satisfied, also, there were districts where the planters would insure the favor of the bureau officers to them by paying them money; and while they were glad to have their favor, still they would condemn such officers, and in such districts there was dissatisfaction.

The Bureau Demoralized Labor

Ku Klux Report. Alabama Testimony (1871), p. 1132. Testimony of Daniel Taylor, an Alabama planter. [1865-1868]

THE negroes that would go and settle down on plantations and work and stay there always had plenty to eat. The white men who employed them felt bound to keep them in plenty to eat and good clothes to wear when they would stay with them; but if a man was trying to make a negro work, and talked a little short to the negro, he would pick up and go somewhere else, very often when a man had made preparations to go on. . .

The negroes would quit and go off for this Bureau when they should have had a dependence in the country. They depended upon the Bureau for rations. . . The negroes cheated the farmers out of their labor. . . The negroes were to pay for their provisions out of their part of the crop and they did not go on making their crop, so that their part of the crop was not sufficient to pay the owner the amount that was due him for the land and stock and the advance.

Wade Hampton's Opinion of the Bureau

Letter to President Johnson. Original owned by Mr. T. C. Thompson, Chattanooga, Tennessee. Hampton was the largest slaveholder in the South in 1860. He was one of the first, in 1865, to declare in favor of a qualified suffrage for the negroes. [1866]

THE next step in the progress of reconstruction was quite as unfortunate as that of garrisoning the South with negro troops. This was the establishment of that incubus, — that Hydra-headed monster, the Freedmen's Bureau. When the North had given freedom to four million stolen slaves, it was hoped that this generous offering which she had laid on the Altar of Liberty would have terminated forever that baleful agitation of the negro question, which has deluged the land with blood and has ruined the fairest portion of this continent. The South acquiesced in the decree — though she was so blind as not to see the justice of it — which by one despotic stroke of the pen stripped her of . . . her property and she . . . endeavored to adapt herself to the new relations between the two races, which this decree had brought about. . . Humanity and interest, which so seldom point in the same direction, in this case impelled the South to do all in its power to fit the negro for his new conditions. The strong but paternal hand which had controlled him through centuries of slavery, having been suddenly and rudely withdrawn, the only hope of rendering him either useful, industrious or harmless, was to elevate him in the scale of civilization, and to make him appreciate not only the blessings, but the duties of freedom. This was the prevalent . . . sentiment of the South and that much more has not been done to carry this sentiment into effect is due solely to the pernicious and mischievous interference of that most vicious institution, the Freedmen's Bureau. The war which was so prolific of monstrosities, new theories of republican government, new versions of the Constitution, new and improved constructions of the Divine precepts of Holy Writ, gave birth to nothing which equals in deformity and depravity this "Monstrum horrendum informe ingens." The whole machinery of this bureau has been used by the basest men, for the purpose of swindling the negro, plundering the white man and defrauding the Government. There may be an honest man connected with the Bureau, but I fear that the commissioners sent by your Excellency to probe the rottenness of this cancer will find their search for such as fruitless as was that of the Cynic of old. The report of these Commissioners furnishes ample justification for the ill-will, the distrust, and the contempt with which the people of the South regard this baleful and pernicious institution.

Influence in Labor and Politics

Ku Klux Report. Alabama Testimony (1871), pp. 357, 371. Statement of A. D. Sayre, formerly a Whig. [1865-1870]

WHEN the agents first came there . . . they established a Freedman's Bureau. They notified everybody that they must employ their freedmen, and that all their contracts must be submitted to the inspection of the Freedmen's Bureau; that no man would be allowed to employ freedmen unless their contracts were submitted to and approved by that Bureau. . . . They listened to every sort of tale that any dissatisfied negro might choose to tell; they would send out and arrest white men, bring them in under guard, try them, and put them in jail. They got hold of plantations there, what they call refuges for freedmen. It was announced that if the freedmen got dissatisfied they could enter there, and be fed and clothed, and taken care of. In that way a large number of negroes were enticed away from plantations where they had been living, and they flocked to these places. Hundreds of them died from neglect. The impression was produced upon the negro that the white man who had been his master was his enemy, and that these men were his peculiar friends; that they had nothing to expect . . . through their old masters. They then commenced the establishment of these Loyal Leagues, into which they got almost every negro in the country. They would send their agents . . . from plantation to plantation, until I expect there was hardly a negro in the whole country who did not belong to the League. In that way a want of confidence was produced between the negro and the white man, and a feeling of confidence between the negro and the agents of this Bureau. It has been a very troublesome thing to counteract that. . . . They would tell all sorts of tales before elections; they would send regular orders to the League members on the plantations to go and vote. I have been told that order extended to negroes from fifteen years and upwards. Negroes themselves have told me that they voted the republican ticket for the reason that they were informed by those men that, if they did not do it, they would be put back into slavery, and their wives made to work on the road. It had such an effect that a gentleman in Montgomery told me that some of his own former slaves came back to him after the election [1870] and said, "Well, massa, what house must I go into? I understand that the democrats have succeeded, and that we are slaves again." . . .

[If the Bureau had not been established] as many of the whites would have acted with the Republican party as with the Democratic party. . . It had a tendency to drive them off [the whites] from the Republican party. . . The Freedmen's Bureau was supposed to be one of the means of that party for the purpose of creating distrust between the negroes and the white people.

The Bureau as a Political Machine

Ku Klux Report. Georgia Testimony, p. 272. Testimony of General Wright of Augusta, ex-Confederate. [1865-1870]

[THE negroes] were taken possession of by a class of men who went down there connected in some way with the Freedmen's Bureau; they swarmed all over the country. The white people were sore, intensely sore . . . and they shrank back and had nothing to say to the negroes. That course of conduct on their part enabled these men to go on and obtain the confidence of the negroes; they made the negroes believe that unless they banded themselves together and stood up for their rights, the white people would put them back into slavery. . . These men came there and fastened themselves upon every community, and when the election for members of the legislature came on they were themselves elected. I can give you an instance right there, within a stone's throw of where I live, of a man by the name of Captain Richardson, who went down there in the Bureau. He lived in Augusta, and was elected a member of the legislature from the county of Hancock, way up in the interior of the State; he perhaps never was in that country in his life. There was a man by the name of J. Mason Rice, who came out in the Bureau, and lived in Augusta; he was elected a representative of the county of Columbia. A man of the name of Sherman came down there, not in the Bureau, but as a developer. He bought a piece of land near Augusta, and worked it for a while, and then had to give it up. He ran for the place of senator in the district composed of Wilkes, Jackson, and Columbia. Wilkes is the county in which Toombs lives. This man ran for senator, and was elected there. There was Rice, elected as a member from Columbia County, and never was in it; Richardson was elected as a member from Hancock County, and he never was in that county; and Sherman was elected as senator from Wilkes, Lincoln, and Columbia Counties, and . . . he has never been in either one of them. A man by the name of Claiborn, a Baltimore negro, came down to Augusta with the Bureau, and was elected a member of the legislature from Burke County. He served until a few months before the close of the legislature, when he was killed by a negro in the capital. . . . Up to the latter part of 1868 the negroes believed that by voting they were going to get a division of the land and stock of the country. These carpet-baggers would go down there and actually sell stakes to them. That is almost too improbable for belief; but these rascals would go down there and sell painted stakes to these negroes, and tell them that all they had to do was to put down the stakes on their owner's farms, and forty acres of land would be theirs after election. You could see them all over the country. The negroes said they gave a dollar apiece for those stakes. They were very ignorant, or they would not have believed such things; but they did believe it.

Political Activities of Bureau Officials

House Report no. 121, 41 Cong., 2 Sess., pp. 47, 53. Extract from minority report, Howard investigation, 1870. [1865-1869]

It was ascertained that the testimony offered would implicate others as high in position as General Howard himself, going to show that the Bureau had been made an active engine for the election of governors, legislators, members of Congress and

United States senators in the Southern States, the public money and property being freely used for these purposes. The majority of the committee would not allow any such field of investigation to be entered, and promptly refused to allow the witnesses ready to prove these facts to be subpoenaed or examined.

Sufficient evidence, however, did get in, to show that to such purposes the bureau was put. The general way in which the political operations were carried on was through the instrumentality of the officers and willing agents of the bureau, the freedmen's schools and teachers, the missionaries sent out by the American Missionary Society, and the Freedmen's Savings Bank. The funds of the bureau were used by each of these. . . Under the pretext of looking after the education and welfare of the freedmen, political organizations were effected, and the negroes instructed as to their political strength and power, by organizing them together in secret organizations. The poor freedman, deceived by pretended friendship . . . fell into the purposes of these men, and submitted himself to the uses to which they put him. General Howard not only knew of this, but was the head of the movement. He proved this upon himself after the majority refused to hear further proof in support of the charges, by putting in as evidence the official report of Colonel John T. Sprague, assistant commissioner for Florida. This report was made to General Howard, and is dated October 1, 1867. Under the head of "politics and public meetings," he gives Howard an account of his political operations, and boasts having "registered 15,441 negro voters, against 11,151 registered whites," and states that he had "taken measures for their quiet instruction, through the medium of sub-assistants, in their rights and duties under the reconstruction acts." . . .

The Freedmen's Bureau has been made a mighty engine of power, by which to control an entire section of the Union, and bring it under partisan subserviency. To accomplish this, the public treasury has been freely used in various ways. Emis-saries have been dispatched to the South with the Bible in one hand and the purse in the other, and who have been backed up and sustained by both the military and civil power of the government. . . .

Under the pretense of giving him protection, the negro was plundered of his just dues; under the pretense of teaching him religion and morality he was taught a hatred of his best friends; under an avowed object of teaching him his political rights and duties, he was drilled into a voting machine, and made tributary to the aspirations of those who said they came to enlighten him; under the plea of shielding him from opposition, hard labor was wrung from him, and his little earnings, once obtained as deposits in freedmen's savings banks, were used for the profit of those who had the control of them.

This bureau had its ramifications everywhere. Its officers and agents were to be found in every State, county, and voting precinct of the South; no election could be held but that some of them were found on the spot, exercising political power over the new-made citizens, and the leading candidates for the principal offices were the self-nominated representatives of the Freedmen's Bureau.

A majority of the members of the legislatures of the so-called reconstructed States last year were either taken from this class, or the immediate dependents of it; the civil government, what there was of it, was in their hands. The bureau was the great absorbent of the only civil authority there.

The Workings of the Bureau

Ku Klux Report (1871), p. 441. Views of the minority of the Ku Klux Committee. [1865-1868]

EVEN while the Federal Government was administering their affairs through direct agencies from Washington, they were oppressed and plundered by the Freedmen's Bureau agencies, by the cotton thieves, and the military, to an extent only exceeded by the carpet-bag local governments which superseded them.

First, as to the Freedmen's Bureau and its operations. By this act, four millions of negroes became the pupils, wards, servitors, and pliant tools of a political and extremely partisan agency, inimical and deadly hostile to the peace, order, and best interests of southern society. Under the workings of the Reconstruction and Freedmen's Bureau acts the foundations of social and political order were uprooted and overturned; the former master became the slave, and the former slave became the master, the elector, the law-maker, and the ostensible ruler. The agents of the Freedmen's Bureau were, as we have shown before, generally of a class of fanatics without character or responsibility, and were selected as fit instruments to execute the partisan and unconstitutional behests of a most unscrupulous head. Thus, the negroes were organized into secret political societies known as Loyal Leagues, in which organizations they were taught that their former owners were their worst enemies, and that to act with them, politically or religiously, would certainly result in their re-enslavement. A regulation of this Bureau required all agreements for service between whites and blacks to be signed and witnessed in the presence of, and left in the custody of the agent. It was a common practice, after a planter or farmer had contracted in the required form with the freedmen for the year, had his crops planted and in process of cultivation, that his negro laborers would suddenly strike for higher wages. Nothing but the intervention of the Bureau agent could induce them to return, and that inducement could only be effected by the planter or farmer paying to the agent from ten to twenty dollars per head. This sum was simply a perquisite of the agent, and when paid, the negro always returned to his labors, though not receiving a cent of additional compensation. It was frequently the case that the same planter or farmer would have to compensate the Bureau agent from two to three times during one year, or lose his crops. This system of ingenious blackmailing produced no little irritation, and frequently total bankruptcy of the planter. These Bureau agents had authority to order the arrest and imprisonment of any citizen on the single statement of any vicious negro; and if any resistance was made to the mandates of the Bureau agent, the post commandant, or military governor, was always ready to enforce it with a file of bayonets.

Many of the agents of the Bureau were preachers, and had been selected as being the most devout, zealous, and loyal of that religious sect known as the Northern Methodist Church.

The negroes were told in the Leagues that, although they had been married according to the plantation custom for forty or fifty years, as freedmen they must procure a license from the court and be remarried. This injunction was most scrupulously obeyed, and by this means the missionaries and preachers made large sums of money, which was thus frequently extorted from old, poor, and ignorant negroes, who had grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

Success of the Bureau

House Report no. 121, 41 Cong., 2 Sess., (1871), p. 20. Quotation from Sidney Andrews, a newspaper correspondent from New England. [1865-1869]

OF the thousand things that the bureau has done no balance sheet can ever be made. How it helped the ministers of the church, saved the blacks from robbery and persecution, enforced respect for the negro's rights, instructed all the people in the meaning of the law, threw itself against the strongholds of intemperance, settled neighborhood quarrels, brought about amicable relations between employer and employed, comforted the sorrowful, raised up the down-hearted, corrected bad habits among whites and blacks, restored order, sustained contracts for work, compelled attention to the statute books, collected claims, furthered local educational movements, gave sanctity to the marriage relation, dignified labor, strengthened men and women in good resolutions, rooted out old prejudices, ennobled the home, assisted the freedmen to become land-owners, brought offenders to justice, broke up bands of outlaws, overturned the class-rule of ignorance, led bitter hearts into brighter ways, shamed strong hearts into charity and forgiveness, promulgated the new doctrine of equal rights, destroyed the seeds of mistrust and antagonism, cheered the despondent, set idlers at work, aided in the reorganization of society, carried the light of the North into the dark places of the South, steadied the negro in his struggle with novel ideas, inculcated kindly feeling, checked the passion of the whites and blacks, opened the blind eyes of judges and jurors, taught the gospel of forbearance, encouraged human sympathy, distributed the generous charities of the benevolent, upheld loyalty, assisted in creating a sentiment of nationality — how it did all this and a hundred-fold more, who shall ever tell? What pen shall ever record? . . .

Success! The world can point to nothing like it in all the history of emancipation. No thirteen millions of dollars were ever more wisely spent; yet, from the beginning this scheme has encountered the bitterest opposition and the most unrelenting hate. Scoffed at like a thing of shame, often struck and sorely wounded, sometimes in the house of its friends, apologized for rather than defended; yet with God on its side, the Freedmen's Bureau has triumphed; civilization has received a new impulse, and the friends of humanity may well rejoice. The bureau work is being rapidly brought to a close, and its accomplishments will enter into history, while the unfounded accusation brought against it will be forgotten. There is a day and hour when slander lives not. When the passions of men subside, and when the dust of time has well fallen, then comes the hour of calmer judgment. Many-tongued scandal has the briefest of existence. . . . Evil is quickly forgotten; truth alone is abiding.

A Negro's Description of the Bureau

John Wallace, Carpet Bag Rule in Florida, pp. 41, 107. [1868]

THE Freedmen's Bureau, an institution devised by Congress under the influence of the very best people of the Northern States, and intended as a means of protection for the freedmen, and preparing them for the new responsibilities and privileges conferred, in the hands of bad men proved, instead of a blessing, to be the worst curse of the race, as under it he was misled, debased, and betrayed. The agents of this Bureau were stationed in all the cities and principal towns in the State. They overruled the local authorities with the arbitrary force of military power. Before it was definitely known that the Congress of the United States could confer the right of suffrage upon the negro the great majority of the agents were more oppressive of the freedmen than the local authorities, their former masters. The State having been impoverished by the war, the national government, realizing the condition of the people, and especially of the freedmen, who were set free with nothing but the scant clothing on their backs, sent provisions to the State to be distributed to such of the freedmen as were struggling, without means of subsistence, to make a crop. This meat and flour was placed in the hands of these agents for distribution, who appropriated it at their discretion, and frequently more largely for their own benefit than that of their wards. The Commissioner of the Bureau for the State, in company with a retired army officer, carried on a large plantation on the Apalachicola, until General Steadman was appointed to examine and report upon the condition of Bureau affairs, when, in anticipation of his visit to the State his interest was suddenly transferred to his partner, who, after gathering and disposing of the cotton crop and all available stock on the place, gathered himself up and left without paying the rents. M. L. Stearns, a subordinate agent at Quincy, was publicly charged with the wholesale disposition of pork and flour, and evidence was produced to convict him of receiving and attempting to force collection of a mortgage for $750 received in payment for provisions; but the officers of the Federal Court refused to entertain this case. . .

As soon as the freedmen were enfranchised they began to receive better treatment at the hands of the Bureau agents. The contracts between them and the planters, which had heretofore been interpreted against them, were now more fairly construed in their interest. . .

He [Purman, a Bureau agent] played upon the weaknesses and impulses of the colored people and drew from them shouts of joy, and responses of applause and approval with the skill and ease a master organist brings out the great swells of music by a gentle touch of the key. These would occur when he was eloquently depicting to his eager listening audiences the horrors of slavery and the cruelty and oppression they had undergone. Every device was resorted to by these agents to embitter the colored man against the white man; and with the powers they possessed, it is no wonder they succeeded upon material so easily misled.

What incendiary harangues failed to accomplish they sought to do by exhibitions of their power over the whites, which they displayed in frequent acts of the grossest tyranny. They set at defiance the orders and decrees of the courts of justice when the matters involved were mere questions of right between two citizens, neither of whom were freedmen. They arrested and imprisoned peaceable citizens without any real cause, and refused to furnish them or their counsel with the charges upon which they were held. On one occasion they had brought before them two young ladies of the highest respectability on the charge of removing flowers from a Union soldier's grave, who protested their innocence and offered to prove it without the insult and humiliation of being arraigned at bureau headquarters; but their appeals were in vain, and they were forced to appear and stand up and unveil themselves in the presence of Hamilton to answer the charge, which no witness could be found to sustain.

Among their duties as agents of the Freedmen's Bureau, was the supervising of labor contracts between the freedmen and their employers. For this service they charged each freedman twenty-five cents and the employer fifty cents. An enterprising and intelligent citizen of the county happening to Washington, called upon General Howard, the head of the Bureau, and inquired of him if his agents were allowed to do such things. The General informed him they were not, and requested him to furnish him with evidence of this being done in any case. Thereupon the gentleman prepared and posted notices requesting those who had receipts for moneys so paid to present them to him, or, in his absence, to a designated agent. This gentleman and his agent were immediately arrested and kept in confinement without charges being preferred against them until one of them was taken dangerously ill, when they were discharged out of fear of the consequences. Four young farmers, who worked a large number of freedmen under a contract approved and ratified by these agents, were arrested and imprisoned for doing what was provided in said contract, and without any charges or causes assigned, though the officers were repeatedly requested to furnish them. The men were discharged at the pleasure of the agents of the bureau. Many other minor acts might be mentioned showing a persistent determination to alienate the races and breed strife.

These deeds of tyranny and oppression were resorted to for the double purpose of demonstrating their power to the colored people and of humiliating the Whites. Of course they bore their legitimate fruit and naturally awakened feelings of the bitterest hostility among the people who were the victims of such injustice and insult. While the colored people were not responsible for these misdeeds, they were inevitably drawn into the troubles which ensued and doubtless encouraged to commit the first act of bloodshed which opened that eventful chapter in the history of Jackson County.

Charges against General Howard

Congressional Globe, April 6, 1870, p. 2641. The opposition to General O. O. Howard, commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau, culminated in the investigation made in 1870. The resolutions below were introduced into the House by Fernando Wood of New York. The testimony taken is in House Report no. 121, 41 Cong., 2 Sess.. The majority report exonerated Howard, the minority held the opposite view. [April 6, 1870]

UPON information and belief I charged that General O. O. Howard, Commissioner of the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen and Abandoned Lands, has been guilty of malversation and dereliction of duty, inasmuch as —

First. That he has taken from the appropriations made for, and the receipts of, that bureau more than five hundred thousand dollars, improperly and without authority of law, for the Howard University, hospital and lands. . . .

Second. That portions of the land alleged to have been sold for the benefit of the Howard University fund were disposed of improperly to members of his own family and officers of his staff.

Third. That bonds issued in aid of the First Congregational church of the city of Washington were taken in payment for a portion of this land, which have not yet been redeemed or paid, nor have they been returned in his official accounts as such.

Fourth. That the University building and Hospital were built of patent brick furnished by the American Building-Block Company, in which General Howard, Charles Howard, General E. Whittlesey, and J. W. Alvord, all attached to the bureau, were interested as stockholders.

Fifth. That the specifications of the construction of those buildings provided that the material used in their erection should be taken from the brick made by this company; thus preventing competition, and securing the use of that brick, and no other, for that purpose. . .

Seventh. That by his consent and with his knowledge lumber belonging to the government was used by this company and appropriated to its own benefit, being resold to its employes.

Eighth. That he pays rent to the Howard University from the funds of the bureau for the privilege of a headquarters.

Ninth. That he draws three salaries, namely, one as a brigadier general in the United States Army, another as Commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau, and a third as head of the Howard University.

Tenth. That he has paid from the funds of the bureau over forty thousand dollars for the construction of the First Presbyterian church, in this city, taking the church bonds in return, which he has either returned in his accounts as cash on hand, or sent south for the purposes of the bureau.

Eleventh. He has advanced a large sum from the funds of the bureau to the Young Men's Christian Association of this city, taking their bonds in payment, which have been sent to Tennessee to help the freedmen's schools in that State.

Twelfth. That he caused or knowingly allowed lands in this city, owned by an officer of the bureau, to be transferred to a freedmen's school in North Carolina; the officer taking the money appropriated for that school, and the school the lands in the city; thus perpetrating a fraud both upon the government and the freedmen.

Thirteenth. That he was interested in the purchase of a farm of about three hundred acres near the Lunatic Asylum in this county, for which the public funds and other property of the government were used. Buildings were erected thereon, built of lumber belonging to the government, and then let or sold to freedmen at exorbitant prices; and that he and his brother, Charles Howard, were personally interested in this transaction as a private pecuniary speculation.

Fourteenth. He has discharged the duties of the office of Commissioner of the bureau with extravagance, negligence and in the interests of himself and family and intimate friends.

Fifteenth. That he is one of the ring known as the "Freedmen's bureau ring," whose connections and influences with the freedmen's savings banks, the freedmen's schools of the South, the political machinery of a party in the Southern States, and whose position has been to devote the official authority and power of the bureau to personal and political profit.

In Successful Operation

House Ex. Doc. no. 70, 39 Cong., 1 Sess. Report of J. W. Alvord, inspector of Bureau schools. Alvord was the founder of the Freedmen's Bank. [January 1, 1866]

THE Savings and Trust Company for freedmen . . . has gone into successful operation in nearly all the States south, and promises to do much to instruct and elevate the financial notions of the freedmen. The trustees and friends of the institution believe that the industry of these four millions furnishes a solid basis for its operations. Pauperism can be brought to a close; the freedmen made self-supporting and prosperous, paying for their educational and Christian institutions, and helping to bear the burdens of government by inducing habits of saving ✓ in what they earn. That which savings banks have done for the working men of the north it is presumed they are capable of doing for these laborers. I was privately and publicly told that the freedmen welcomed the institution. They understand our explanations of its meaning, and the more intelligent see and appreciate fully its benefits. Calls were made upon me at all the large towns for branches of the bank.

Information and Instruction

"I consider the Freedmen's Savings and Trust Company to be greatly needed by the colored people, and have welcomed it as an auxiliary to the Freedmen's Bureau."—MAJ. GEN. O. O. HOWARD.

"'Tis little by little the bee fills her cell;
 And little by little a man sinks a well;
 'Tis little by little a bird builds her nest;
 By littles a forest in verdure is drest;
 'Tis little by little great volumes are made;
 By littles a mountain or levels are made;
 'Tis little by little an ocean is filled;
 And little by little a city we build;
 'Tis little by little an ant gets her store;
 Every little we add to a little makes more;
 Step by step we walk miles, and we sew stitch by stitch;
 Word by word we read books, cent by cent we grow rich."

This is a benevolent institution. All profits go to the depositors, or to educational purposes for the freedmen and their descendants.

The whole institution is under the charter of Congress, and received the commendation and countenance of the President, Abraham Lincoln. One of the last official acts of his valued life was the signing of the bill which gave legal existence to this bank.

Statistics of Savings

House Misc. Doc. no. 16, 39 Cong., 2 Sess., pp. 61, 91. The bank was insolvent after 1872 and it collapsed in 1874 owing depositors the amounts shown in the second table. The total business done was about $56,000,000. [1866-1874]

Frederick Douglass and the Freedmen's Bank

Life and Times of Frederick Douglass by Himself, p. 487. Used by permission of De Wolfe, Fiske and Co. Copyright, 1885. Douglass was made president of the Bank a few weeks before it failed. Those who wrecked the Bank withdrew. [1874]

It is not altogether without a feeling of humiliation that I must narrate my connection with the "Freedmen's Savings and Trust Company."

This was an institution designed to furnish a place of security and profit for the hard earnings of the colored people, especially at the South. . . . There was something missionary in its disposition, and it dealt largely in exhortations as well as promises. The men connected with its management were generally church members, and reputed eminent for their piety. Some of its agents had been preachers of the "Word." Their aim was how to instil into the minds of the untutored Africans lessons of sobriety, wisdom, and economy, and to show them how to rise in the world. Like snowflakes in winter, circulars, tracts, and other papers were, by this benevolent institution, scattered among the sable millions, and they were told to "look" to the Freedmen's Bank and "live." Branches were established in all the Southern States, and as a result, money to the amount of millions flowed into its vault. With the usual effect of sudden wealth, the managers felt like making a little display of their prosperity. They accordingly erected on one of the most desirable and expensive sites in the national capital, one of the most costly and splendid buildings of the time, finished on the inside with black walnut and furnished with marble counters and all the modern improvements. . . .

I had read of this bank when I lived in Rochester, and had indeed been solicited to become one of its trustees and had reluctantly consented to do so; but when I came to Washington and saw its magnificent brown stone front, its towering height, its perfect appointments and the fine display it made in the transaction of its business, I felt like the Queen of Sheba when she saw the riches of Solomon, that "the half has not been told to me." . . .

My confidence in the integrity and wisdom of the management was such that at one time I had entrusted to its vaults about twelve thousand dollars. It seemed fit to me to cast in my lot with my brother freedmen and to help build up an institution which represented their thrift and economy to so striking advantage; for the more millions accumulated there, I thought, the more consideration and respect would be shown to the colored people of the whole country.

About four months before this splendid institution was compelled to close its doors in the starved and deluded faces of its depositors, and while I was assured by its President and by its Actuary of its sound condition, I was solicited by some of its trustees to allow them to use my name in the board as a candidate for its presidency. So I waked up one morning to find myself seated in a comfortable arm chair, with gold spectacles on my nose, and to hear myself addressed as President of the Freedmen's Bank. I could not help reflecting on the contrast between Frederick, the slave boy, running about . . . with only a tow linen shirt to cover him, and Frederick, President of a bank counting its assets by millions. . . My term of service on this golden height covered only the brief space of three months, and these three months were divided into two parts, during the first part of which I was quietly employed in an effort to find out the real condition of the bank and its numerous branches. . . I was encouraged in the belief that by curtailing the expenses, and doing away with non-paying branches, which policy the trustees had now adopted, we could be carried safely through the financial distress then upon the country. So confident was I of this, that in order to meet what was said to be a temporary emergency, I was induced to loan the bank ten thousand dollars of my own money, to be held by it until it could realize on a part of its abundant securities. . . The more I observed and learned the more my confidence diminished. I found that those trustees who wished to issue cards, and publish addresses professing the utmost confidence in the bank, had themselves not one dollar deposited there. Some of them, while strongly assuring me of its soundness, had withdrawn their money and opened accounts elsewhere. Gradually I discovered that the bank had through dishonest agents, sustained heavy losses at the South; that there was a discrepancy on the books of forty thousand dollars for which no account could be given, and that, instead of our assets being equal to our liabilities, we could not in all likelihood . . . pay seventy-two cents on the dollar. There was an air of mystery . . . which greatly troubled me, and which I have only been able to explain to myself on the supposition that the employees . . . were . . . naturally anxious to hold their places, and consequently have the business continued. . .

I found the path of enquiry I was pursuing an exceedingly difficult one. I knew that there had been a heavy draft made upon its reserved fund, but I did not know, what I should have been told before being allowed to enter upon the duties of my office, that this reserve, which the bank by its charter was required to keep, had been entirely exhausted and that hence there was nothing left to meet any future emergency. . . I was in six weeks after my election as president of this bank, convinced that it was no longer a safe custodian of the hard earnings of my confiding people. This conclusion once reached, I could not hesitate as to my duty in the premises and this was, to save as much as possible of the assets held by the bank for the benefit of the depositors; and to prevent their being further squandered in keeping up appearances, and in paying the salaries of myself and other officers in the bank. . . I felt it my duty to make known as speedily as possible to Hon. John Sherman, Chairman of the Senate Committee on Finance, and to Senator Scott of Pennsylvania . . . that I regarded the institution as insolvent and irrecoverable, and that I could no longer ask my people to deposit their money in it. This representation to the finance committee subjected me to very bitter opposition on the part of the officers of the bank. Its actuary, Mr. Stickney, immediately summoned some of the trustees, a dozen or so of them, to go before the finance committee and make a counter statement to that made by me. . . Some of them who had assisted me by giving me facts showing the insolvency of the bank, now made haste to contradict that conclusion and to assure the committee that it was, if allowed to go on, abundantly able to weather the financial storm and pay dollar for dollar to its depositors. . .

I, however, adhered to my statement that the bank ought to stop. The finance committee substantially agreed with me and in a few weeks so legislated, by appointing three commissioners to take charge of its affairs, as to bring this imposing banking business to a close.

Investigation of the Bank

House Report, no. 502, 44 Cong., 1 Sess. From the report of a Committee of Congress, signed by Democrats and Republicans.

As a befitting introduction to their report your committee offer the following brief account of the origin, structure, and early history of the institution commonly known as the Freedmen's Bank, from which . . . it will be easy to discern how naturally it degenerated into a monstrous swindle and justifies a suspicion that it was . . . merely a scheme of selfishness under the guise of philanthropy, and to its confiding victims an incorporate body of false pretenses. While the civil war was still in progress it had occurred to some of the generals of the Federal armies that depositories for receiving and keeping the pay and bounties of the colored Union soldiers would be a convenient and necessary provision for their benefit, and accordingly military savings banks were established at Norfolk, Va., and at Beaufort, S. C. They seemed to have been well-timed and suitable to the object in view, as the colored soldiers eagerly availed themselves for depositing therein such portions of their pay and bounties as they did not need for their own immediate use, and large sums were found to have accumulated in them when hostilities ceased. From some cause or other, but doubtless by the death of many, the dispersion of the survivors, and the prevailing ignorance of the class of depositors, this money remained uncalled for. . . To utilize this fund and to collect and turn to profit the large sums still due and to be paid by the Government seemed to have led to the conception of the idea of a Freedmen's Savings and Trust Company. . . The Freedmen's Bureau, so redolent of evil under specious guise, and an adept in the ways and means of squandering money, readily supplied the personal agencies for the undertaking. Of these the chief and founder of the so-called Freedmen's Bank was one John W. Alvord, an attaché of the bureau, and superintendent of its educational department. This man . . . abounding in pious platitudes about the good of mankind in general, but with a keen eye to the main chance . . . having proved a failure in both lay and clerical pursuits . . . now turned his benevolent regards to the confiding and ignorant black element of the South. He got up the charter for the bank, a charter so singular in its array of high and eminent names for corporators, for its business organization, whereby nine out of fifty trustees were constituted a quorum, and so utterly and entirely without safeguards or protection for those who were to become its patrons and depositors that it is hard to believe that its author, whatever might have been his other deficiencies, did not thoroughly understand how to organize cunning against simplicity and make it pay for the pleasure of being cheated. As no intentional injustice is designed by your committee in their search for and exposure of the men who are responsible for the outrages perpetrated upon the colored people by the bank, we desire to say right here that many of the distinguished and eminently worthy gentlemen who figure in the charter never gave the use of their names and never accepted or took to execute the trust it created. They were thrust in for appearance' sake and to make the delusion attractive and complete. Some who really believed in the good professions of the projectors of the scheme and its adaptability to promote the welfare of those for whose benefit it was apparently intended, and who at first took seats at the board of trustees, quickly vacated them in disgust and the whole management soon devolved, as was manifestly the intention that it should do, upon a cabal in Washington, consisting of a small minority of the acting trustees. . . .

Theoretically the design and the structure of the bank were admirable. The pecuniary benefit of the freedmen, and the moral and social advantages which attend upon material prosperity, were the avowed objects. The various benefits of this beneficent scheme were so divided and allotted out to boards and committees as seemingly to insure efficiency and fidelity in the officers and agents, and proper guarantees to depositors. But the human instrumentalities on which the system depended for its successful operation were lamentably defective. . . The law lent no efficacy to the moral obligations assumed by the trustees, officers, and agents, and the whole concern inevitably became as a "whited sepulchre." . . The inspectors . . were of little or no value, either through the connivance and ignorance of the inspectors or the indifference of the trustees to their reports. . . The committee of examination . . were still more careless and inefficient, while the board of trustees, as a supervising and administrative body, intrusted with the fullest power of general control over the management, proved utterly faithless to the trust reposed in them. Everything was left to the actuary and finance committee. Such was the practical working of the machine. . .

The depositors were of small account now compared with the personal interest of the political jobbers, real-estate pools, and fancy-stock speculators, who were organizing a raid upon the freedmen's money and resorted to . . amendment of the charter to facilitate their operations. The District [of Columbia] government, too, came in to hasten and profit by the work of spoliation thus inaugurated. Its treasury was wholly unequal to the task of sustaining the magnificent expenditures of the board of public works, presided over by H. D. Cooke, and controlled by Mr. A. R. Shepherd. Some exchequer must be found to advance upon the depreciated bonds and worthless auditor's certificates of the District, or the contracts must fail, and the speculations of the pool and of Shepherd and his friends in out-of-the-way and unimproved town lots come to grief. This mass of putridity, the District government, now abhorred of all men, and abandoned and repudiated even by the political authors of its being, was represented in the bank by no less than five of its high officers, viz., H. D. Cooke, George W. Balloch, Wm. S. Huntington, D. L. Eaton, and Z. B. Richards, all of whom were in one way or other concerned in speculations [involving] a free use of the funds of the Freed-man's Bank. They were high in power, too, with the dominant influence in Congress, as the legislation they asked or sanctioned and obtained, fully demonstrated. Thus it was that without consulting the wishes or regarding the interests of those most concerned — the depositors — the vaults of the bank were literally thrown open to unscrupulous greed and rapacity. The toilsome savings of the poor negroes, hoarded and laid by for a rainy day, through the carelessness and dishonest connivance of their self-constituted guardians, melted away. . .

Your committee call attention to the books of the bank. Their condition indicates a settled purpose, running through a series of years, to muddle and confuse accounts so as to make them unintelligible. . . If nothing more than an occasional mistake or slight "irregularity" occurred, it might be set down, perhaps, to the inexperience of the book-keepers or the want of clerical force to write up the books properly. . . But it is far otherwise. The books are mutilated and defaced — leaves cut out in some places and firmly pasted together in others — without proper indexes to guide and direct the searcher into their hidden mysteries — abounding in false entries and forced balances. . .

Full of gratitude to the Government for his emancipation, the negro was easily approached by, and gave unheeding credence to, any adventurer who declared himself his friend and professed a desire to aid his moral, intellectual, and social elevation. . . He believed and was deceived, trusted and was betrayed. Taught, to his ruin and that of the whites among whom he lives, . . and between whom and himself there must be mutual trust and confidence before prosperity can be restored to his section, to hate and distrust the "old master classes," he is now derided . . for his credulity, . . and told that those who dragged him out of slavery have by that one act cancelled every obligation to deal with him on principles of common honesty. Upon no one of the originators and trustees of the bank did so great a responsibility rest as upon John W. Alvord, but yet he permitted all the misdoings described in this report to go on from year to year without any vigorous protest or effort to correct them and so far from giving warnings to those who had so trusted the concern through his persuasion, he helped to keep up the delusion by praising it, enlarging upon its benefit, giving assurance of its ability, and soliciting increase of depositors and deposits.

Experience of a Depositor

House Report, no. 502, 44 Cong., 1 Sess., p. 29. Statement of John Watkins of Washington, D. C. Boston, assistant cashier and son-in-law of Wilson, cashier of the Washington branch, had been checking out Watkins' money. The latter could not read. He lost $1100 to Boston. The cashiers were frequently dishonest. [1874]

ABOUT a week after the bank closed I carried my pass-book up there, and also my little boy's. My little boy had $60 in the bank, I think, and I had nine hundred odd. I wanted to find out how I stood. I saw Boston fifteen or sixteen times after the bank closed, and I waited and waited and waited, till at last I went to the bank to see about my book. I could not find Boston in, but I said to the clerk there, "Do you know how Watkin's account is?" He looked at the book and said "Yes, you have 40 cents." I said, "Forty hells." He said, "Yes." Said I, "What will I do?" Said he, "I don't know." I said I never had the money and asked him to tell me where I could find Boston. He told me where to find Boston, somewhere on E street, below the Patent Office, and there I found him. I went in and commenced pulling off my coat to fight him right away. I said, "Boston, what is the meaning of this, that I have only 40 cents in the bank?" His face got white and, said he, "Mr. Watkins, I drew it out." "Hell," said I, "you drew it out and told me nothing of it?" "Well," said he, "I will fix that all right." The bank was to pay a dividend in two or three weeks' time, and he said, "I will pay you a dividend on the 15th of next month." Said I, "Jesus Christ, I do not know what to do with you." The clerk at the bank showed me the checks on which the money was drawn, but of course, I did not know one check from the other. . . I could not get anything out of Boston. . .

I said, "Mr. Wilson, I don't want to get closed up in this concern. [This was before the bank suspended.] A man in this town, unless he has money, is not worth more than a dog. I have worked hard, night and day, for this money, and so has my wife, and it should not be closed up in this way." He said, "You see that Treasury over there don't you?" I said, "Yes." "Well," said he, "there is no more chance of this bank closing or bursting than there is of that Treasury." I said, "If that is so, it is all right." He said, "It is just prejudice that white people have got against us." I then made myself contented. My heart went down and I went to work. There the matter stood, and only 40 cents on my passbook to my credit. They did not rob my boy's book. When I was loaning money to Boston I supposed that it was all right as he was cashier of the bank. I supposed he owned it all himself.

RECONSTRUCTION BY CONGRESS

INTRODUCTION

By the first Reconstruction Act of March 2, 1867, Congress, which had been opposing the presidential policy of restoration since 1863 and which had refused to recognize the state governments set up by Lincoln and Johnson, took entire charge of the matter of restoring the Southern states to the Union. The plan of Congress involved the discontinuance of the "state" governments established by Lincoln and Johnson, and the setting up of new governments based on a new electorate — the leading whites being disfranchised and the blacks enfranchised. The army was used to control the South while the "reconstruction" was taking place. The president's opposition was somewhat neutralized by the passage of laws limiting his power of dismissal of Federal officials and his authority over the army. The policy of Congress was outlined in the Act of March 2, but three more acts — March 23 and July 19, 1867, and March 11, 1868 — were necessary to get the plan into operation. The Supreme Court was deprived of jurisdiction over these laws.

For about one year the South was under the rule of military commanders over whom the President had little control. During this time a Radical party, composed mainly of blacks, and a Conservative party, most of whom were white, were organized in the South, the first supporting the policy of Congress, the other opposing it. Under the supervision of the army the new electorate was enrolled, elections were held; and conventions, made up of native whites (scalawags), Northern whites (carpetbaggers), and negroes, met and framed for the Southern states new constitutions in harmony with the Reconstruction acts. The constitutions were then ratified by the new electorate except in Virginia, Texas and Mississippi, officials were elected, and the states were ready for the recognition of Congress. Meanwhile the constant opposition of the President to Congressional measures led to an attempt to remove him by impeachment. The charges were trivial, and the trial a mockery, but by one vote he escaped removal. After the failure of impeachment the seven reconstructed states were readmitted under stringent conditions as to future regulation of the suffrage. Since each reconstructed state was forced to ratify the proposed Fourteenth Amendment that measure was now adopted as a part of the Constitution.

In the presidential campaign of 1868 Reconstruction was the chief issue, the Republicans upholding the policy, the Democrats proposing to discontinue it. The newly reconstructed states, controlled by the black voters, carried the election for the Republicans and the Reconstruction was then completed under President Grant, who secured a modification of the Radical constitutions of Texas, Virginia, and Mississippi, which were then adopted and the states readmitted. With the forced ratification of these reconstructed states the Fifteenth Amendment was now adopted and the Reconstruction was considered complete; negro suffrage was a fact and the negro party was in control in the South; the leading whites were disfranchised; and the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments seemed to make permanent these conditions.

I. CONGRESS BEGINS RECONSTRUCTION

First Reconstruction Act

Acts and Resolutions, 39 Cong., 2 Sess., p. 60. Vetoed by the President and passed over the veto on the same day. [March 2, 1867]

WHEREAS no legal State governments or adequate protection for life or property now exists in the rebel States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, Florida, Texas, and Arkansas; and whereas it is necessary that peace and good order should be enforced in said States until loyalty and republican State governments can be legally established: Therefore

Be it enacted, . . . That said rebel States shall be divided into military districts and made subject to the military authority of the United States, as hereinafter prescribed, and for that purpose Virginia shall constitute the first district; North Carolina and South Carolina the second district; Georgia, Alabama and Florida, the third district; Mississippi and Arkansas the fourth district; and Louisiana and Texas the fifth district.

Sec. 2. . . It shall be the duty of the President to assign to the command of each of said districts an officer of the army, not below the rank of brigadier general, and to detail a sufficient military force to enable such officer to perform his duties and enforce his authority within the district to which he is assigned.

Sec. 3. . . It shall be the duty of each officer assigned as aforesaid to protect all persons in their rights of person and property, to suppress insurrection, disorder, and violence, and to punish, or cause to be punished, all disturbers of the public peace and criminals, and to this end he may allow local civil tribunals to take jurisdiction of and to try offenders, or, when in his judgment it may be necessary for the trial of offenders, he shall have power to organize military commissions or tribunals for that purpose; and all interference under color of State authority with the exercise of military authority under this act shall be null and void.

Sec. 4. . . All persons put under military arrest by virtue of this act shall be tried without unnecessary delay, and no cruel or unusual punishment shall be inflicted; and no sentence of any military commission or tribunal hereby authorized, affecting the life or liberty of any person, shall be executed until it is approved by the officer in command of the district, and the laws and regulations for the government of the army shall not be affected by this act, except in so far as they conflict with its provisions. . .

Sec. 5. . . When the people of any one of said rebel States shall have formed a constitution of government in conformity with the Constitution of the United States in all respects, framed by a convention of delegates elected by the male citizens of said State twenty-one years old and upward, of whatever race, color, or previous condition, who have been resident in that State for one year previous to the day of such election, except such as may be disfranchised for participation in the rebellion, or for felony at common law, and when such constitution shall provide that the elective franchise shall be enjoyed by all such persons as have the qualifications herein stated for electors of delegates, and when such constitution shall be ratified by a majority of the persons voting on the question of ratification who are qualified as electors of delegates, and when such constitution shall have been submitted to Congress for examination and approval, and Congress shall have approved the same, and when said State, by a vote of its legislature elected under said constitution, shall have adopted the amendment to the Constitution of the United States, proposed by the thirty-ninth Congress, and known as article fourteen, and when said article shall have become a part of the Constitution of the United States, said State shall be declared entitled to representation in Congress, and senators and representatives shall be admitted therefrom on their taking oaths prescribed by law, and then and thereafter the preceding sections of this act shall be inoperative in said State: Provided, That no person excluded from the privilege of holding office by said proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States shall be eligible to election as a member of the convention to frame a constitution for any of said rebel States, nor shall any such person vote for members of such convention.

Sec. 6. . . . Until the people of said rebel States shall be by law admitted to representation in the Congress of the United States, any civil governments which may exist therein shall be deemed provisional only, and in all respects subject to the paramount authority of the United States at any time to abolish, modify or control, or supersede the same; and in all elections to any office under such provisional governments all persons shall be entitled to vote, and none others, who are entitled to vote under the provisions of the fifth section of this act; and no person shall be eligible to any office under any such provisional governments who would be disqualified from holding office under the provisions of the third article¹ of said constitutional amendment.

The Command of the Army

Acts and Resolutions, 39 Cong., 2 Sess., p. 120. The following sections were passed as "riders" to the army appropriation act. The command of the army was thus practically taken from the President and given to General Grant. [March 2, 1867]

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the headquarters of the General of the army of the United States shall be at the city of Washington, and all orders and instructions relating to military operations issued by the President or Secretary of War shall be issued through the General of the army, and, in case of his inability, through the next in rank. The General of the army shall not be removed, suspended, or relieved from command, or assigned to duties elsewhere than at said headquarters, except at his own request, without the previous approval of the Senate; and any orders or instructions relating to military operations issued contrary to the requirements of this section shall be null and void; and any officer who shall issue orders or instructions contrary to the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor in office; and any officer of the army who shall transmit, convey, or obey any orders or instructions so issued contrary to the provisions of this section, knowing that such orders were so issued, shall be liable to imprisonment for not less than two nor more than twenty years, upon conviction thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction.

Sec. 5. . . It shall be the duty of the officers of the army and navy and of the Freedmen's Bureau to prohibit and prevent whipping or maiming of the person, as a punishment for any crime, misdemeanor or offense, by any pretended civil or military authority in any State lately in rebellion, until the civil government of such State shall have been restored, and shall have been recognized by the Congress of the United States.

Sec. 6. . . All militia forces now organized or in service in either of [the late Confederate States, Arkansas and Tennessee excepted] be forthwith disbanded, and that the further organization, arming, or calling into service of the said militia forces, . . . is hereby prohibited under any circumstances whatever until the same shall be authorized by Congress.

Tenure of Office Act

Acts and Resolutions, 39 Cong., 2 Sess., p. 62. This act had an important bearing on the course of Reconstruction, the trouble with Stanton, and the impeachment. It was passed over the President's veto. [March 2, 1867]

Be it enacted . . . That every person holding any civil office to which he has been appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and every person who shall hereafter be appointed to any such office, and shall become duly qualified to act therein, is, and shall be, entitled to hold such office until a successor shall have been in like manner appointed and duly qualified, except as herein otherwise provided: Provided, That the Secretaries of State, of the Treasury, of War, of the Navy, and of the Interior, the Postmaster General, and the Attorney General shall hold their offices respectively for and during the term of the President by whom they may have been appointed, and for one month thereafter, subject to removal by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Sec. 2. . . When any officer appointed as aforesaid, excepting judges of the United States courts, shall, during the recess of the Senate, be shown, by evidence satisfactory to the President, to be guilty of misconduct in office, or crime, or for any reason shall become incapable or legally disqualified to perform its duties, in such case, and in no other, the President may suspend such officer, and designate some suitable person to perform temporarily the duties of such office until the next meeting of the Senate, and until the case shall be acted upon by the Senate; . . . and in such case it shall be the duty of the President, within twenty days after the first day of such next meeting of the Senate, to report to the Senate such suspension, with the evidence and reasons for his action in the case and the name of the person so designated to perform the duties of such office. And if the Senate shall concur in such suspension, and advise and consent to the removal of such officer, they shall so certify to the President, who may thereupon remove such officer, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint another person to such office. But if the Senate shall refuse to concur in such suspension, such officer so suspended shall forthwith resume the functions of his office, and the powers of the person so performing its duties in his stead shall cease, and the official salary and emoluments of such officer shall, during such suspension, belong to the person so performing the duties thereof, and not to the officer so suspended. . . .

Sec. 3. . . . The President shall have power to fill all vacancies which may happen during the recess of the Senate, by reason of death or resignation, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session thereafter. And if no appointment, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate shall be made to such office so vacant or temporarily filled as aforesaid during such next session of the Senate, such office shall remain in abeyance without any salary, fees, or emoluments attached thereto, until the same shall be filled by appointment thereto by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and during such time all the powers and duties belonging to such office shall be exercised by such other officer as may by law exercise such powers and duties in case of a vacancy in such office.

Sec. 4. . . Nothing in this act contained shall be construed to extend the term of any office the duration of which is limited by law.

Sec. 5. . . If any person shall, contrary to the provisions of this act, accept any appointment to or employment in any office, or shall hold or exercise, or attempt to hold or exercise, any such office or employment, he shall be deemed, and is hereby declared to be, guilty of a high misdemeanor, and upon trial and conviction thereof, he shall be punished therefor by a fine not exceeding ten thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or both said punishments. . .

Sec. 6. . . Every removal, appointment, or employment made, had, or exercised, contrary to the provisions of this act, and the making, signing, sealing, countersigning, or issuing of any commission or letter of authority for or in respect to any such appointment or employment shall be deemed, and are hereby declared to be, high misdemeanors, and upon trial and conviction thereof, every person guilty thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding ten thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or both said punishments, in the discretion of the court. . .

Sec. 7. . . It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Senate, at the close of each session thereof, to deliver to the Secretary of the Treasury, and to each of his assistants, and to each of the Auditors, and to each of the Comptrollers in the Treasury, and to the Treasurer, and to the Register of the Treasury, a full and complete list, duly certified, of all persons who shall have been nominated to and rejected by the Senate during such session, and a like list of all the offices to which nominations shall have been made and not confirmed and filled at such session.

Sec. 8. . . Whenever the President shall, without the advice and consent of the Senate, designate, authorize, or employ any person to perform the duties of any office, he shall forthwith notify the Secretary of the Treasury thereof, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury thereupon to communicate such notice to all the proper accounting and disbursing officers of his department.

Sec. 9. . . No money shall be paid or received from the Treasury, or paid or received from or retained out of any public moneys or funds of the United States, whether in the Treasury or not, to or by or for the benefit of any person appointed to or authorized to act in or holding or exercising the duties or functions of any office contrary to the provisions of this act; nor shall any claim, account, voucher, order, certificate, warrant, or other instrument providing for or relating to such payment, receipt, or retention, be presented, passed, allowed, approved, certified, or paid by any officer of the United States, or by any person exercising the functions or performing the duties of any office or place of trust under the United States, for or in respect to such office, or the exercising or performing the functions or duties thereof; and every person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor, and, upon trial and conviction thereof, shall be punished therefor by a fine not exceeding ten thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding ten years, or both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

Supplementary Reconstruction Act

Acts and Resolutions, 40 Cong., 1 Sess., p. 260. Passed over the veto. This act was to hasten the Reconstruction which would probably have failed under the first act. [March 23, 1867]

Be it enacted . . . That before the first day of September, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, the commanding general in each district defined by an act entitled "An act to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel States," passed March second, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, shall cause a registration to be made of the male citizens of the United States, twenty-one years of age and upwards, resident in each county or parish in the State or States included in his district, which registration shall include only those persons who are qualified to vote for delegates by the act as aforesaid, and who shall have taken and subscribed the following oath or affirmation: "I, _____, do solemnly swear (or affirm,) in the presence of Almighty God, that I am a citizen of the State of _____; that I have resided in said State for _____ months next preceding this day, and now reside in the county of _____, or the parish of _____, in said State (as the case may be:) That I am twenty-one years old; that I have not been disfranchised for participation in any rebellion or civil war against the United States, nor for felony committed against the laws of any State or of the United States; that I have never been a member of any State legislature, nor held any executive or judicial office in any State and afterwards engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof; and I have never taken an oath as a member of Congress of the United States, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, and afterwards engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof; that I will faithfully support the Constitution and obey the laws of the United States, and will, to the best of my ability, encourage others so to do, so help me God;" which oath or affirmation may be administered by any registering officer.

Sec. 2. . . . After the completion of the registration hereby provided for in any State, at such time and places therein as the commanding general shall appoint and direct, of which at least thirty days' public notice shall be given, an election shall be held of delegates to a convention for the purpose of establishing a constitution and civil government for such State loyal to the Union, said convention in each State, except Virginia, to consist of the same number of members as the most numerous branch of the State legislature of such State in the year eighteen hundred and sixty, to be apportioned among the several districts, counties, or parishes of such State by the commanding general, giving to each representation in the ratio of voters registered as aforesaid, as nearly as may be. The convention in Virginia shall consist of the same number of members as represented the territory now constituting Virginia in the most numerous branch of the legislature of said State in the year eighteen hundred and sixty, to be apportioned as aforesaid.¹

Sec. 3. . . At said election the registered voters of each State shall vote for or against a convention to form a constitution therefor under this act. Those voting in favor of such a constitution shall have written or printed on the ballots by which they vote for delegates, as aforesaid, the words "For a convention," and those voting against such a convention shall have written or printed on such ballots the words "Against a convention." The person appointed to superintend said election, and to make return of the votes given thereat, as herein provided, shall count and make return of the votes given for and against a convention; and the commanding general to whom the same shall have been returned shall ascertain and declare the total vote in each State for and against a convention. If a majority of the votes given on that question shall be for a convention, then such convention shall be held as hereinafter provided; but if a majority of said votes shall be against a convention, then no such convention shall be held under this act: Provided, That such convention shall not be held unless a majority of all such registered voters shall have voted on the question of holding such convention.

Sec. 4. . . The commanding general of each district shall appoint as many boards of registration as may be necessary, consisting of three loyal officers or persons, to make and complete the registration, superintend the election, and make return to him of the votes, lists of voters, and of the persons elected as delegates by a plurality of the votes cast at said election; and upon receiving said returns he shall open the same, ascertain the persons elected as delegates according to the returns of the officers who conducted said election, and make proclamation thereof; and if a majority of the votes given on the question shall be for a convention, the commanding general, within sixty days from the date of election, shall notify the delegates to assemble in convention, at a time and place to be mentioned in the notification, and said convention, when organized, shall proceed to frame a constitution and civil government according to the provisions of this act and the act to which it is supplementary; and when the same shall have been so framed, said constitution shall be submitted by the convention for ratification to the persons registered under the provisions of this act at an election to be conducted by the officers or persons appointed or to be appointed by the commanding general, as hereinbefore provided, and to be held after the expiration of thirty days from the date of notice thereof, to be given by said convention; and the returns thereof shall be made to the commanding general of the district.

Sec. 5. . . If, according to said returns, the constitution shall be ratified by a majority of the votes of the registered electors qualified as herein specified, cast at said election, at least one half of all the registered voters voting upon the question of such ratification, the president of the convention shall transmit a copy of the same, duly certified, to the President of the United States, who shall forthwith transmit the same to Congress, if then in session, and if not in session, then immediately upon its next assembling; and if it shall, moreover, appear to Congress that the election was one at which all the registered and qualified electors in the State had an opportunity to vote freely and without restraint, fear, or the influence of fraud, and if the Congress shall be satisfied that such constitution meets the approval of a majority of all the qualified electors in the State, and if the said constitution shall be declared by Congress to be in conformity with the provisions of the act to which this is supplementary, and the other provisions of said act shall have been complied with, and the said constitution shall be approved by Congress, the State shall be declared entitled to representation, and senators and representatives shall be admitted therefrom as therein provided.

Sec. 6. . . All elections in the States mentioned in the said "Act to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel States," shall, during the operation of said act, be by ballot; and all officers making the said registration of voters and conducting said elections shall, before entering upon the discharge of their duties, take and subscribe the oath prescribed by the act approved July second, eighteen hundred and sixty-two,¹ entitled "An act to prescribe an oath of office:" Provided, That if any person knowingly and falsely take and subscribe any oath in this act prescribed, such person so offending and being thereof duly convicted, shall be subject to the pains, penalties, and disabilities which by law are provided for the punishment of the crime of wilful and corrupt perjury.

Sec. 7. . . All expenses incurred by the several commanding generals, or by virtue of any orders issued, or appointments made, by them, under or by virtue of this act, shall be paid out of any moneys in the treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Sec. 8. . . The convention for each State shall prescribe the fees, salary, and compensation to be paid to all delegates and other officers and agents herein authorized or necessary to carry into effect the purposes of this act not herein otherwise provided for, and shall provide for the levy and collection of such taxes on the property in such State as may be necessary to pay the same.

Sec. 9. . . The word article, in the sixth section of the act to which this is supplementary, shall be construed to mean section.

Interpretation of the Reconstruction Acts

House Ex. Doc. no. 34, 40 Cong., 1 Sess. Proceedings at a meeting of the cabinet. Instructions in accord with these proceedings were sent on June 20, 1867, through the adjutant general's office to the military commanders in the South. The instructions are in Richardson, Messages and Papers, vol. vi, p. 552. [June 18, 1867]

THE President announced that he had under consideration the two opinions from the Attorney-General as to the legal questions arising upon the Acts of Congress, commonly known as the reconstruction acts, and that in view of the great magnitude of the subject, and the various interests involved, he deemed it proper to have it fully considered in cabinet, and to avail himself of all the light which could be afforded by the opinions and advice of the members of the cabinet, to enable him to see that these laws be faithfully executed, and to decide what orders and instructions are necessary and expedient to be given to the military commanders.

The President said further, that the branch of the subject that seemed to him first in order for consideration was as to the instructions to be sent to the military commanders for their guidance, and for the guidance of persons offering for registration. The instructions proposed by the Attorney-General, as set forth in the summary contained in his last opinion, will therefore be now considered. . .

The reading of the summary having been concluded, each section was then considered, discussed, and voted upon as follows:

1. The oath prescribed in the supplementary act defines all the qualifications required, and every person who can take that oath is entitled to have his name entered upon the list of voters.

All vote aye except the Secretary of War, who votes nay.

2. The board of registration have no authority to administer any other oath to the person applying for registration than this prescribed oath; nor to administer any oath to any other person touching the qualifications of the applicant, or the falsity of the oath so taken by him.

No provision is made for challenging the qualifications of the applicant, or entering upon any trial or investigation of this qualification, either by witness or any other form of proof.

All vote aye except the Secretary of War, who votes nay. . .

4. An unnaturalized person cannot take this oath, but an alien who has been naturalized can take it, and no other proof of naturalization can be required of him.

All vote aye except the Secretary of War, who votes nay. . .

6. No one who has been disfranchised for participation in any rebellion against the United States, or for felony committed against the laws of any State or of the United States, can take this oath.

The actual participation in a rebellion, or the actual commission of a felony, does not amount to a disfranchisement.

The sort of disfranchisement here meant is that which is declared by law passed by competent authority, or which has been fixed upon the criminal by the sentence of the court which tried him for the crime.

No law of the United States has declared the penalty of disfranchisement for participation in rebellion alone. Nor is it known that any such law exists in either of these ten States, except perhaps Virginia, as to which State special instructions will be given.

All vote aye except the Secretary of War, who dissents as to the second and third paragraphs.

7. As to Disfranchisement arising from having held office, followed by participation in Rebellion.

This is the most important part of the oath, and requires strict attention to arrive at its meaning.

The applicant must swear or affirm as follows:

That I have never been a member of any State Legislature, nor held any executive or judicial office in any State, and afterward engaged in an insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof; that I have never taken an oath as a member of Congress of the United States, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State Legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, and afterwards engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof.

Two elements must concur in order to disqualify a person under these clauses: First, the office and official oath to support the Constitution of the United States; second, engaging afterward in rebellion. Both must exist to work disqualification, and must happen in the order of time mentioned.

A person who has held an office and taken the oath to support the Federal Constitution, and has not afterward engaged in rebellion, is not disqualified. So, too, a person who has engaged in rebellion, but has not theretofore held an office and taken that oath, is not disqualified.

All vote aye except the Secretary of War, who votes nay. . .

9. Militia officers of any State, prior to the rebellion, are not subject to disqualification.

All vote aye except the Secretary of War, who votes nay. . .

13. Persons who exercise mere employments under State authority are not disqualified; such as commissioners to lay out roads, commissioners of public works, visitors of state institutes, directors of state institutions, examiners of banks, notaries public, and commissioners to take acknowledgment of deeds.

Concurred in unanimously, but the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of War express the opinion that lawyers are such officers as are disqualified, if they participated in the rebellion. Two things must exist as to any person to disqualify him from voting: first the office held prior to the rebellion, and afterward participation in the rebellion.

14. An act to fix upon a person the offense of engaging in rebellion under this law, must be an overt and voluntary act, done with the intent of aiding or furthering the common unlawful purpose. A person forced into the rebel service by conscription, or under a paramount authority which he could not safely disobey, and who would not have entered such service if left to the free exercise of his own will, cannot be held to be disqualified from voting.

All vote aye except the Secretary of War, who votes nay as the proposition is stated. . .

16. All those who, in legislative or other official capacity, were engaged in the furtherance of the common unlawful purpose, where the duties of the office necessarily had relation to the support of the rebellion, such as members of the rebel conventions, congresses, and legislatures, diplomatic agents of the rebel Confederacy, and other officials whose offices were created for the purpose of more effectually carrying on hostilities, or whose duties appertained to the support of the rebel cause, must be held to be disqualified.

But officers who, during the rebellion, discharged official duties not incident to war, but only such duties as belong even to a state of peace, and were necessary to the preservation of order and the administration of law, are not to be considered as thereby engaging in rebellion or as disqualified. Disloyal sentiments, opinions, or sympathies would not disqualify: but where a person has by speech or by writing incited others to engage in rebellion, he must come under the disqualification.

All vote aye except the Secretary of War, who dissents to the second paragraph, with the exception of the words, "where a person has by speech or by writing incited others to engage in rebellion, he must come under the disqualification." . . .

Third Reconstruction Act

Statutes at Large, vol. xv, p. 14. Passed over the veto. To nullify the interpretation of the Reconstruction acts by the cabinet and the attorney general. [July 19, 1867]

Be it enacted . . . That it is hereby declared to have been the true intent and meaning of the [acts of March 2, March 23, 1867] that the governments then existing in the rebel States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, Florida, Texas, and Arkansas, were not legal State governments; and that thereafter said governments, if continued, were to be continued subject in all respects to the military commanders of the respective districts, and to the paramount authority of Congress.

Sec. 2. . . The commander of any district named in said act shall have power, subject to the disapproval of the General of the army of the United States, and to have effect till disapproved, whenever in the opinion of such commander the proper administration of said act shall require it, to suspend or remove from office, or from the performance of official duties and exercise of official powers, any officer or person holding or exercising, or professing to hold or exercise, any civil or military office or duty in such district under any power, election, appointment, or authority derived from, or granted by, or claimed under, any so-called State or the government thereof, or any municipal or other division thereof; and upon such suspension or removal such commander, subject to the disapproval of the General as aforesaid, shall have power to provide from time to time for the performance of the said duties of such officer or person so suspended or removed, by the detail of some competent officer or soldier of the army, or by the appointment of some other person to perform the same, and to fill vacancies occasioned by death, resignation, or otherwise.

Sec. 3. . . The General of the army of the United States shall be invested with all the powers of suspension, removal, appointment, and detail granted in the preceding section to district commanders.

Sec. 4. . . The acts of the officers of the army already done in removing in said districts persons exercising the functions of civil officers, and appointing others in their stead, are hereby confirmed: Provided, That any person heretofore or hereafter appointed by any district commander to exercise the functions of any civil office, may be removed, either by the military officer in command of the district, or by the General of the army. And it shall be the duty of such commander to remove from office as aforesaid all persons who are disloyal to the government of the United States, or who use their official influence in any manner to hinder, delay, prevent, or obstruct the due and proper administration of this act and the acts to which it is supplementary.

Sec. 5. . . The boards of registration provided for in the act entitled "An act supplementary to an act . . . passed March 23, 1867, shall have power, and it shall be their duty before allowing the registration of any person, to ascertain, upon such facts or information as they can obtain, whether such person is entitled to be registered under said act, and the oath required by said act shall not be conclusive on such question, and no person shall be registered unless such board shall decide that he is entitled thereto; and such board shall also have power to examine under oath, (to be administered by any member of such board,) any one touching the qualification of any person claiming registration; but in every case of refusal by the board to register an applicant, and in every case of striking his name from the list as hereinafter provided, the board shall make a note or memorandum, which shall be returned with the registration list to the commanding general of the district, setting forth the grounds of such refusal or such striking from the list: Provided, That no person shall be disqualified as member of any board of registration by reason of race or color.

Sec. 6. . . The true intent and meaning of the oath prescribed in said supplementary act is, (among other things,) that no person who has been a member of the legislature of any State, or who has held any executive or judicial office in any State, whether he has taken an oath to support the Constitution of the United States or not, and whether he was holding such office at the commencement of the rebellion, or had held it before, and who has afterwards engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof, is entitled to be registered or to vote; and the words "executive or judicial office in any State" in said oath mentioned shall be construed to include all civil offices created by law for the administration of any general law of a State, or for the administration of justice.

Sec. 7. . . The time for completing the original registration provided for in said act may, in the discretion of the commander of any district, be extended to the 1st day of October, 1867; and the boards of registration shall have power, and it shall be their duty, commencing fourteen days prior to any election under said act, and upon reasonable public notice of the time and place thereof, to revise, for a period of five days, the registration lists, and upon being satisfied that any person not entitled thereto has been registered, to strike the name of such person from the list, and such person shall not be allowed to vote. And such board shall also, during the same period, add to such registry the names of all persons who at that time possess the qualifications required by said act who have not been already registered; and no person shall, at any time, be entitled to be registered or to vote, by reason of any executive pardon or amnesty, for any act or thing which, without such pardon or amnesty, would disqualify him for registration or voting.

Sec. 8. . . Section four of said last-named act shall be construed to authorize the commanding general named therein, whenever he shall deem it needful, to remove any member of a board of registration and to appoint another in his stead, and to fill any vacancy in such board.

Sec. 9. . . All members of said boards of registration and all persons hereafter elected or appointed to office in said military districts, under any so-called State or municipal authority, or by detail or appointment of the district commanders, shall be required to take and subscribe the ["iron clad" oath].

Sec. 10. . . No district commander or member of the board of registration, or any of the officers or appointees acting under them, shall be bound in his action by any opinion of any civil officer of the United States.

Sec. 11. . . All the provisions of this act and of the acts to which this is supplementary shall be construed liberally, to the end that all the intents thereof may be fully and perfectly carried out.

Fourth Reconstruction Act

Acts and Resolutions, 40 Cong., 2 Sess., p. 10. According to the act of March 2, sec. 5, and of March 23, sec. 5, a majority of the registered voters must vote on the Constitution or it would fail. In Alabama the people had defeated the new Constitution by staying away from the polls. This law was to prevent rejection by other states. It became a law without the signature of the President.

[March 11, 1868]

Be it enacted . . . That hereafter any election authorized by the act passed March 23, 1867 . . . shall be decided by a majority of votes actually cast; and at the election in which the question of the adoption or rejection of any constitution is submitted, any person duly registered in the State may vote in the election district where he offers to vote when he has resided therein for ten days next preceding such election, upon presentation of his certificate of registration, his affidavit, or other satisfactory evidence, under such regulations as the district commanders may prescribe.

Sec. 2. . . The constitutional convention of any of the States mentioned in the acts to which this is amendatory may provide that at the time of voting upon the ratification of the constitution the registered voters may vote also for members of the House of Representatives of the United States, and for all elective officers provided for by the said constitution; and the same election officers who shall make the return of the votes cast on the ratification or rejection of the constitution, shall enumerate and certify the votes cast for members of Congress.

2. THE SOUTH'S RECEPTION OF THE POLICY OF CONGRESS

Whites Promise Co-operation

Montgomery Mail, April 21, 1867. Resolutions adopted at a public meeting in Mobile. [April 19, 1867]

Resolved, Without expressing any opinion as to the [Reconstruction Acts] . . . we hereby manifest our gratification at the spirit of moderation which the major-general [Pope] commanding the Third District brings to the discharge of the responsible duties and to the exercise of the great powers committed to him; and that we feel called upon to meet him in a like spirit and hereby to express to him our purpose to throw no obstacle in the path of his official duties, but that in all that tends to a genuine desire for the restoration of the Union under the Constitution . . . we pledge ourselves to a most earnest and cordial co-operation. . . .

We recommend to all who are qualified to register and vote under the provision of the law, to do so as early as convenient after the opportunity is offered for that purpose, and to scrupulously abstain from any act which might be construed into a disposition to hinder or disturb any other person in the discharge of any duty or the exercise of any privilege conferred by law. . . .

We find nothing in the changed political condition of the white and black races in the South that ought to disturb the harmonious relations between them; that we are ready to accord to the latter every right and privilege to which they are entitled under the laws of the land; that we sincerely desire their prosperity and their improvement in all the moral and intellectual qualities that are necessary to make them useful members of society; that we are their friends, both from gratitude for their fidelity in the past — in war as well as in peace — and because our interests in the future are inseparably connected with their well-being.

Justice to the Blacks

South Atlantic. March, 1878. From a public address by Gen. Wade Hampton. Represents the sentiments of his class. [August 7, 1867]

As it is of the last consequence to maintain the same amicable relations which have heretofore existed between the whites and the blacks, I cannot too strongly reiterate my counsel that all classes should cultivate harmony and exercise forbearance. Let our people remember that the negroes have . . . behaved admirably, and that they are in no manner responsible for the present condition of affairs. Should they, in the future, be misled by wicked or designing men, let us consider how ignorant they necessarily are, and let us, only the more, try to convince them that we are their best friends. Deal with them with perfect justice, and thus show that you wish to promote their advancement and enlightenment. Do this, and the negroes will not only learn to trust you, but they will appreciate the fact, so evident to us, that we can do without them far better than they can do without us. On a late public occasion . . . I expressed my perfect willingness to see impartial suffrage established at the South, and I believe that this opinion is entertained, not only by a large majority of the intelligent and reflecting whites, but also of this same class among the blacks. The Supreme Court has decided that a negro is not a citizen of the United States, and Congress cannot reverse that decision by an act. The states, however, are competent to confer citizenship on the negro, and I think it is the part of wisdom that such action be taken by the Southern States. We have recognized the freedom of the blacks and have placed this fact beyond all possibility of a doubt, denial or recall. Let us recognize in the same frank manner, and as fully, their political rights also.

A Negro's Speech

Montgomery Mail, April 21, 1867. Delivered at a meeting of whites and blacks in Mobile. This was before the whites gave up the attempt to divide the negro vote. [April 19, 1867]

I RECEIVED an invitation from the white citizens of Mobile to speak for the purpose of reconciling our races, . . . to extend the hand of fellowship. . . I believe [they] are sincere in what they promise. . . Let us remove the past from our bosoms, and reconcile ourselves and positions together. I am certain that my race cannot be satisfied unless granted all the rights allowed by the law and by that flag. The resolutions read to you to-night guarantee every thing. Can you expect any more? If you do, I would like to know where you are going to get it. I am delighted in placing myself on this platform, and in doing this I am doing my duty to my God and my country. We want to do what is right. We believe white men will also do what is right.

Beginning of Opposition

Annual Cyclopaedia, 1867. p. 28. Platform promulgated by the first political convention held in Alabama after the Civil War. Though composed mainly of former Whigs the convention organized what is now the Democratic party in Alabama. [1867]

THE Conservative men of the State of Alabama . . . adopt, as an expression of their views, the following resolutions of the Conservative men of the State of Pennsylvania, adopted at a recent convention in that State:

1. The Constitution of the United States . . . is binding upon every inhabitant of all ranks, sexes, colors, ages, and conditions, and it is the duty of each and every one, without exception, or modification under any circumstances, to adhere to, protect, and defend the same.

2. In all conflict of powers under that instrument the supreme judiciary power is the only arbiter. . .

3. The Union of the States is decided by the war and accepted by the Southern people to be perpetual. . .

4. Congress is not the Federal Government, nor is the President, nor the Supreme Court. The Federal Government is that frame of civil polity established by the Constitution, consisting of all three, each supreme in his own limits, and each entitled, equally with the others, to the loyal obedience of every inhabitant of all the States.

5. By the Constitution and under the fundamental law of the Federal Government . . . and of which Congress itself is the creature, representation in Congress and the electoral colleges is a right, fundamental and indestructible in its nature, and abiding in every State; being a duty as well as right pertaining to the people of every State, and the denial of which is the destruction of the Federal Government.

The Conservative men of Alabama adopt, as a further expression of their opinions and purposes, the following:

6. Each State under the Constitution has the exclusive right to prescribe the qualifications of its own electors.

7. . . It is our earnest aim and purpose to cultivate relations of friendship, harmony, and peace between the two races — to deal justly with the blacks — to instruct and aid in instructing them in a proper understanding of all their duties to themselves, to society, and to the country — and we denounce as treacherous and base all attempt by bad men to engender or encourage antagonism between the two races.

8. . . We are inhabitants of a common country, sharers and sufferers of a common destiny — and we will do all in our power to instruct and elevate the colored race in its moral, social and political responsibilities.

9. . . While we have much charity for the colored man, and feel inclined to look indulgently and tolerantly on his prejudices of race, inculcated and encouraged as they have been by recent events, and by insidious counsel of bad men, we appeal to him by the common interests of a common country, to place his trust in those he knows to be honorable, and to deal cautiously with strangers who bear no evidence that they were honored where they are better known.

Opposition of the Whites in Arkansas

J. M. Harrell, The Brooks and Barter War, p. 37. Advice of white leaders. [1867]

AFTER a most careful and thorough consideration of the Reconstruction Act itself, with all the reasons for and against which we have heard or read, we regard reconstruction under that act as an impossibility. Some sort of restoration may be had under it, but a reconstruction such as will give our people equal rights with others, and such as will secure to our State and her citizens full constitutional rights, cannot be had under that measure. Any reconstruction short of this would be a cruel mockery, and would result, in the end, in the certain degradation, prostration and complete ruin of the State. As harsh and severe and as odious as military rule may be, we prefer it infinitely to what must, of necessity, follow from any kind of restoration or reconstruction under that act.

Therefore, a convention to bring about such a reconstruction, as this bill contemplates, is to be avoided as the worst of evils. And if the convention is not needed to effect national restoration, or national integrity, certainly it is not necessary for any merely local purposes. This is more particularly true when in its proceedings hundreds and thousands of our citizens are not permitted to even have a voice, but are altogether excluded, . . . disfranchised, and branded as traitors and felons.

We regard it, then, as a sacred duty on the part of those who claim this as their home, and who feel for the pride, honor, and prosperity of the State, to go to the polls and vote against a convention, and at the same time to vote for cautious, prudent, wise, conservative delegates, so that if a convention should be held, its proceedings will be controlled and directed with an assurance that the State will not be given up to destruction.

"Virtue and Intelligence under Foot"

J. S. Reynolds, Reconstruction in South Carolina, p. 75. Protest of convention of whites. Used by permission of Mr. Reynolds.
[September 21, 1867]

WE desire peace for its own sake, for its holy Christian influence, and for the civilization and refinement which spring up in its path. Do the Reconstruction acts of Congress propose to give us this peace? No — they give us war and anarchy, rather. They sow the seeds of discord in our midst and place the best interests of society in the hands of an ignorant mob. They disfranchise the white citizen and enfranchise the newly emancipated slave. The slave of yesterday, who knew no law but the will of the master, is today about to be invested with the control of the government. In all popular governments the two great sources of power may be traced, (1) to the exercise of the ballot, (2) to the franchise of the jury box. Invest any people with these two great powers, and they have at once the government of the country in their hands. By the Reconstruction acts of Congress these powers are conferred upon the negro — he can make and unmake the Constitution and the laws which he will administer according to the dictates of another or his own caprice.

We are not unfriendly to the negro. . . In his property, in his life and in his person we are willing that the black man and the white man shall stand together upon the same platform and be shielded by the same equal laws. We venture the opinion that the people of South Carolina are prepared to adopt as their own the Constitution of any New England or other Northern State, wherein it is supposed that the civil rights of the negro are more fully and amply secured. But upon a question involving such great and momentous issues we should be untrue to ourselves and unfair to our opponents were we to withhold the frank and full expression of our opinions. We, therefore, feeling the responsibility of the subject and the occasion, enter our most solemn protest against the policy of investing the negro with political rights. The black man is what God and nature and circumstances have made him. That he is not fit to be invested with these important rights may be no fault of his. But the fact is patent to all that the negro is utterly unfitted to exercise the highest functions of the citizen. The government of the country should not be permitted to pass from the hands of the white man into the hands of the negro. The enforcement of the Reconstruction acts by military power under the guise of negro voters and negro conventions cannot lawfully reestablish civil government in South Carolina. It may for a time hold us in subjection to a quasi-civil government backed by military force, but it can do no more. As citizens of the United States we should not consent to live under negro supremacy, nor should we acquiesce in negro equality. Not for ourselves only, but on behalf of the Anglo-Saxon race and blood in this country, do we protest against this subversion of the great social law, whereby an ignorant and depraved race is placed in power and influence above the virtuous, the educated and the refined. By these acts of Congress intelligence and virtue are put under foot, while ignorance and vice are lifted into power.

A Southern Radical Platform

Annual Cyclopaedia, 1867, p. 460. A Radical party consisting mainly of Northern whites and negroes was organized in each Southern state after the passage of the Reconstruction acts. [1867]

WE advocate and will enforce perfect equality under the law of all men, without distinction of race or color; indorse the acts of the Thirty-ninth and Fortieth Congresses; will reconstruct Louisiana upon the Congressional basis, and send to Congress only true and loyal men. Nominations for office to be made only of those who will enforce perfect equality and the right to hold office, irrespective of race or color. We will insist on perfect equality, without distinction of race or color, in the right to vote and enter the jury-box, without any educational or property qualifications being required; also on the right to practice all professions, to buy, sell, travel, and be entertained, and to enter into any and all civil contracts. . . We will also advocate immigration, and division of lands of the State, as far as practicable, into small farms, in order that the masses of our people may be enabled to become landholders. We will advocate the repeal of the cotton tax by Congress. . . We will advocate equality in schools. . . We will insist on a thorough revision of the laws of Louisiana, that they may guarantee equal justice to black and white alike. . .

The platform further condemns Johnson's amnesty proclamation, believing the disfranchisement of rebels to be the highest duty of the General Government; favors the maintenance of an adequate military force in Louisiana to see the laws enforced, and life and property protected; declares that no man is to be supported for office who will not boldly and openly pledge himself to make equal distribution among white and colored alike of all offices to which he may have the power of appointment. As the newly enfranchised citizens constitute a majority of the party, at least one-half of the nominations for elective offices shall be taken from that class, no distinction to be made whether nominees or appointees were born free or not, provided they are loyal, capable, and honest. The party will always discountenance any attempt on the part of any race or class to assume practical control of any branch of the government to the exclusion of any other race or class.

3. THE USE OF THE ARMY IN RECONSTRUCTION

The Army Takes Control

War Department Archives. G. O. no. 1, 2nd Military District, (North Carolina and South Carolina). Gen. D. E. Sickles in command.
[March 21, 1867]

2. In the execution of the duty of the commanding general to maintain the security of the inhabitants in their persons and property, to suppress insurrection, disorder and violence, and to punish or cause to be punished all disturbers of the public peace and criminals, the local civil tribunals will be permitted to take jurisdiction of and try offenders, excepting only such cases as may by the order of the commanding general be referred to a commission or other military tribunal for trial.

3. The civil government now existing in North Carolina and South Carolina is provisional only, and in all respects subject to the paramount authority of the United States, at any time to abolish, modify, control, or supersede the same. Local laws and municipal regulations not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States, or the proclamations of the President, or with such regulations as are or may be prescribed in the orders of the commanding general, are hereby declared to be in force; and, in conformity therewith civil officers are hereby authorized to continue the exercise of their proper functions, and will be respected and obeyed by the inhabitants.

4. Whenever any civil officer, magistrate, or court neglects or refuses to perform an official act properly required of such tribunal or officer, whereby due and rightful security to person or property shall be denied, the case will be reported by the post commander to these headquarters.

5. Post commanders will cause to be arrested persons charged with the commission of crimes and offenses, when the civil authorities fail to arrest and bring such offenders to trial, and will hold the accused in custody for trial by military commission, provost court, or other tribunal organized pursuant to orders from these headquarters. . .

6. The commanding general, desiring to preserve tranquility and order, by means and agencies most congenial to the people, solicits the zealous and cordial coöperation of civil officers in the discharge of their duties, and the aid of all good citizens in preventing conduct tending to disturb the peace; and to the end that occasion may seldom arise for the exercise of military authorities in matters of ordinary civil administration, the commanding general respectfully and earnestly recommends to the people and authorities of North and South Carolina unreserved obedience to the authority now established, and the diligent, considerate, and impartial execution of the laws enacted by their government.

Status of State Officials

War Department Archives, G. O. no. 1, 3d Military District, (Georgia, Florida, Alabama). Gen. John Pope in command. [April 1, 1867]

I. The civil officers at present in office in Georgia, Florida, and Alabama, will retain their offices until the expiration of their terms of service . . . so long as justice is impartially and faithfully administered. . .

II. It is to be clearly understood, however, that the civil officers thus retained in office shall confine themselves strictly to the performance of their official duties, and whilst holding their office they shall not use any influence whatever to deter or dissuade the people from taking an active part in reconstructing their State governments, under the act of Congress to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel States, and the act supplementary thereto. . .

IV. No elections will be held in any of the States comprised in this military district, except such as provided for in the act of Congress, and in the manner therein established; but all vacancies in civil offices which now exist, or which may occur by expiration of the term of office of the present incumbents, before the prescribed registration of voters is completed, will be filled by appointment of the General commanding the district.

Registrars and Registration Districts

War Department Archives. G. O. no. 5, 3d Military District.

[April 8, 1867]

II. In order to execute [the Act of March 2, 1867] with as little delay as possible, the commanding officers of the districts of Alabama, Georgia, and Florida, will proceed immediately to divide those States into convenient districts for registration, aided by such information as they may have or can obtain. It is suggested that the election districts in each State which in 1860 sent a member to the most numerous branch of the State Legislature, will be found a convenient division for registration.

It is desirable that in all cases the registers shall be civilians, where it is possible to obtain such as come within the provisions of the act, and are otherwise suitable persons; and that military officers shall not be used for this purpose except in case of actual necessity. The compensation for registers will be fixed hereafter, but the general rule will be observed of graduating the compensation by the number of recorded voters. To each list of voters shall be appended the oath of the register that the names have been faithfully recorded, and represent actual legal voters, and that the same man does not appear under different names. The registers are specifically instructed to see that all information concerning their political rights is given to all persons entitled to vote under the act of Congress; and they are made responsible that every such legal voter has the opportunity to record his name. . .

IV. The district commanders in each of the States comprised in this military district are authorized to appoint one or more general supervisors of registration, whose business it shall be to visit the various points where registration is being carried on; to inspect the operations of the registers; and to assure themselves that every man entitled to vote has the necessary information concerning his political rights, and the opportunity to record his name.

V. A general inspector, either an officer of the Army or a civilian, will be appointed at these headquarters, to see that the provisions of this order are fully and carefully executed. . .

VII. The commanding officer of each district will give public notice when and where the registers will commence the registration, which notice will be kept public by the registers in each district during the whole time occupied by registration.

VIII. Interference by violence, or threats of violence, or other oppressive means to prevent the registration of any voter, is positively prohibited, and any person guilty of such interference shall be arrested and tried by the military authorities.

Enrolling the New Electorate

War Department Archives, G. O. no. 20, 3d Military District.
[May 21, 1867]

IN accordance with [the act of March 23, 1867].

I. The States of Georgia and Alabama are divided into registration districts, and numbered and bounded as hereinafter described.

II. A Board of Registration is herein appointed for each district . . . to consist of two white registrars and one colored registrar. In the State of Georgia, where only the two white registrars are designated in this order, it is directed that these white registrars in each district immediately select, and cause to be duly qualified . . . a competent colored man to complete the Board of Registration. . .

III. Each registrar will be required to take and subscribe the ["iron clad" oath] . . . and an additional oath to discharge faithfully the duty of registrar under the late acts of Congress. It is not believed that any of the appointees hereinafter designated will be unable to take the test oath mentioned. Blank forms of these oaths will be sent to the appointees at once, and on being executed and returned to the superintendents of State registration, their commissions as registrars will be issued and forwarded to them immediately.

IV. In order to secure a full registration of voters, it is determined to fix the compensation of registrars according to the general rule adopted in taking the census. In the cities, the compensation is fixed at fifteen cents for each recorded voter; in the most sparsely settled counties and districts, at forty cents per voter. The compensation will be graduated between these limits according to the density of the population, and the facilities of communication. Ten cents per mile will be allowed for the transportation of registrars off the lines of railroads and steamboats.

V. It is hereby made the duty of all registrars, and they will be expected to perform it strictly, to explain to all persons, who have heretofore not enjoyed the right of suffrage, what are their political rights and privileges, and the necessity of exercising them upon all proper occasions.

VI. The name of each voter shall appear in the list of voters for the precinct or ward in which he resides; and in cases where voters have been unable to register, whilst the Board were in the wards or precincts, where such voter lives, opportunity will be given to register at the county seats of their respective counties, at a specified time, of which due notice will be given; but the names of all voters thus registered, will be placed on the list of voters of their respective precincts.

VII. The Board of Registration will give due notice, so that it may reach persons entitled to register, of the date they will be in each election precinct, the time they will spend in it, and the place where the registration will be made; and upon the completion of the registration for each county, the Board of Registration will give notice that they will be present for three successive days, at the county seat of such county, to register such voters as have failed to register, or been prevented from registering in their precincts, and to hear evidence in the cases of voters rejected by the registrars in the several precincts, who may desire to present testimony in their own behalf. . .

IX. The lists of registered voters, for each of the precincts, will be exposed in some public place in that precinct, for ten consecutive days, at some time subsequent to the completion of the registration for each county, and before any election is held, in order that all supposed cases of fraudulent registration may be thoroughly investigated. Due notice will be given and provisions made for the time and place for the examination and settlement of such cases. . .

XII. Violence or threats of violence, or any other oppressive means to prevent any person from registering his name, or exercising his political rights, are positively prohibited, and it is distinctly announced that no contract or agreement with laborers, which deprive them of their wages for any longer time than actually consumed in registering or voting will be permitted to be enforced against them in this district; and this offence, or any previously mentioned in this paragraph, will cause the immediate arrest of the offender and his trial before a military commission.

XIII. The exercise of the right of every duly authorized voter, under the late acts of Congress, to register and vote, is guaranteed by the military authorities of this district; and all persons whomsoever are warned against any attempt to interfere to prevent any man from exercising this right, under any pretext whatever, other than objection by the usual legal mode.

XIV. In case of any disturbance or violence at the place of registration, or any molestation of registrars or of applicants to register, the Board of Registration will call upon the local civil authorities for a police force, or a posse, to arrest the offender and preserve quiet, or, if necessary, upon the nearest military authorities, who are hereby instructed to furnish the necessary aid. Any civil officials who refuse, or who fail to protect registrars or applicants to register, will be reported to the headquarters of the officer commanding in the State, who will arrest such delinquents, and send charges against them to these headquarters, that they may be brought before a military commission. [Here follows a list of names of registrars for the two States].

Questions to be Answered by Persons Proposing to Register

1. Have you been United States Senator, Representative, or elector of President or Vice President, at any time before January 26, 1861?

2. Did you hold any office under the United States Government of any kind whatsoever, before January 26, 1861?

5. Did you in 1862 or in 1864 register yourself as an alien, or did you obtain protection papers from representatives of any foreign power?

In case any of the preceding questions are answered "Yes," or should you know they should be so answered, it would be proper to ask the following:

6. Were you in the Confederate service, military, naval, or civil, or did you give aid and comfort to those engaged in hostility to the United States?

If answered, "Yes," or if you know it to be so, they must not be registered.

Interference with the Civil Government

War Department Archives, G. O. no. 32, 2d Military District.
[May 30, 1867]

1. Any citizen, a qualified voter, according to the [Acts of March 2 and March 23, 1867] is eligible to office in the provisional government of North and South Carolina. All persons appointed to office will be required to take the oath prescribed by the act aforesaid, and to file the same, duly subscribed and sworn to, with the post commander.

2. All citizens assessed for taxes, and who shall have paid taxes for the current year, are qualified to serve as jurors. It shall be the duty of the proper civil officers, charged with providing lists of jurors, to proceed, within their several jurisdictions, without delay, and ascertain the names of all qualified persons and place them on the jury lists, and from such revised lists all jurors shall be hereafter summoned and drawn in the manner required by law.

3. All citizens are eligible to follow any licensed calling, employment, or vocation, subject to such impartial regulations as may be prescribed by municipal or other competent authority, not inconsistent with common rights and the Constitution and laws of the United States. . .

4. The mayors of cities, and other municipal town officers, and all sheriffs, magistrates, and police officers are required to be vigilant in maintaining order, and in the discharge of their duties they will be expected to coöperate with the military authorities.

5. Post commanders may summon to their aid, whenever the ordinary means at their disposal shall not be sufficient to execute their orders, such of the civil officers and as many of the citizens within the territorial limits of the military post as may be necessary; and the neglect or refusal of any person to aid and assist in the execution of the order of the commanding officer will be deemed a misdemeanor, punishable by such fine or imprisonment as may be imposed by a military tribunal, approved by the commanding general.

6. No license for the sale of intoxicating liquors in quantities less than one gallon, or to be drunk on the premises, shall be granted to any person other than an inn-keeper. The number of such licenses shall be determined, and the fees to be charged for each license shall be prescribed and collected, by the municipal or town authorities, and appropriated exclusively for the benefit of the poor. If any person shall be found drunk on the premises where liquor is sold, the licenses may be revoked by any magistrate. . .

7. All contracts hereafter made for the manufacture, sale, transportation, storage, or insurance of intoxicating liquors shall, within this military district, be deemed and treated as against public policy; and no civil suit, action, or proceeding for the enforcement of any such contract shall be entertained in any court.

8. In public conveyances on railroads, highways, streets, or navigable waters no discrimination because of color or caste shall be made, and the common rights of all citizens thereon shall be recognized and protected. The violation of this regulation shall be deemed a misdemeanor, and render the offender liable to arrest and trial by a military tribunal, to be designated by the commanding general, besides such damages as the injured party may sue for and recover in the civil courts.

9. Remedy by distress for rent is abolished where lands are leased or let out for hire or rent. Cotton, corn, or other produce of the sale, when severed from the land, may be impounded, but the same shall not be removed; and cotton, corn, or other produce so impounded shall be held as security for the rent or hire so claimed, and may be sold in satisfaction for any judgment for the same: provided, that any unsatisfied claim for labor bestowed upon the cultivation of any such cotton, corn, or other produce shall in no case be postponed to any demand for rent or hire but to the extent of such claim for labor, so there shall be a lien on such cotton, corn, or other produce, having preference for any claim for rent or hire.

Regulation of Local Government

War Department Archives, G. O. no. 25, 3d Military District.
[May 29, 1867]

I. The late disgraceful riot at Mobile, due mainly to want of efficiency or inclination on the part of the mayor and chief of police to perform their obvious duty, seems to render it necessary that the military authorities of this district should explain to all such officials the position they occupy under the laws of the United States, and the manner in which they will be expected to discharge their trusts.

II. . . The final responsibility for peace and security in the several States in this military district rests . . . with the military authorities, and in case the civil provisional officers in any part of it prove unable or unwilling to protect the people, it will become necessary for the military power either to supersede them by military officers or by other civil officers. . .

IV. In cities or towns having municipal government, the mayor and chief of police, or other civil officers possessing their authority . . . are required to be present at every public political meeting or assemblage which occurs within the limits of their jurisdiction, with such police force and arrangements as will render disturbance or riots impracticable. It will be no excuse to say that such civil authorities did not know of the meeting, or did not apprehend disturbance. It is easy by municipal regulation to require that sufficient notice of any such meeting be given to the mayor or other proper authority to enable him to prepare for the suppression of disturbance; and it is proper in the present excited state of the public mind to make such arrangements as are necessary for the preservation of peace at all public political meetings, even if there be really no danger of disturbance. . . .

V. At all public meetings or assemblages held outside of town or city corporations, the sheriff of the county or his deputy or a deputy specially appointed for the occasion, will be present, and will, in case of need, organize a posse from the people on the ground, which he will hold separate from the body of the assemblage, to interpose, if necessary, to preserve the peace; but in selecting persons to serve as a temporary police force or posse, they are instructed not to summon any of the officers or public speakers of the assemblage. Sheriffs, or their deputies, are empowered to exact service from all thus summoned as a posse, and to require that due notice shall be given to the sheriffs themselves of any public political meetings or assemblages which may be called in their respective counties, in time to make the arrangements herein indicated. . . .

VII. In case of any riot or disturbance, if it cannot be clearly shown that the civil officers above indicated were present, and actively and faithfully performed their duties, both by word and deed, such officers will be deposed from their offices and otherwise held responsible by the military authorities. . . .

VIII. All commanders of troops in this district are also instructed to render the above-mentioned civil officers, on their application, whatever military aid may be needed, and the military commanders are directed to send a judicious and careful officer to be present at such political meetings herein referred to as may occur within the limits of their jurisdiction. Every officer thus detailed, while not interfering with the civil officers in the performance of their duties, will stand ready to interpose, and, if necessary, to bring such military force to the spot, as the necessity of the case may demand.

IX. Post and detachment commanders within this district are directed to keep themselves advised of all public political meetings which take place within the limits of their jurisdiction, and during such meetings to hold themselves and their commands in readiness for immediate action at the call of the officer whom they are directed in a previous paragraph of this order to send to such meeting. Commanding officers are informed that they will be held to their full share of responsibility for any want of precautionary measures or prompt action to prevent riots, or to arrest disturbers of peace.

Military Police and Courts

War Department Archives. G. O. no. 31, 1st Military District. (Virginia). Gen. J. M. Schofield in command. [May 25, 1867]

1. For the purpose of giving adequate protection to all persons in their rights of person and property in cases where the civil authorities may fail, from whatever cause to give such protection, and to insure the prompt suppression of insurrection, disorder, and violence, military commissioners, to be selected from the officers of the army and of the Freedmen's Bureau, will be appointed and given jurisdiction over sub-districts, to be defined in the orders appointing them, with sufficient military force to execute or secure the execution of their orders.

2. For the purpose of suppressing insurrection, disorder or violence, the military commissioners are given command of the police of cities and the power of counties, in addition to the troops that may be placed at their disposal; and all police officers, sheriffs, constables, and other persons are required in such cases to obey and execute the orders of the military commissioners.

3. For the purpose of protecting individuals in their rights of person and property, and of bringing offenders to justice, the military commissioners are clothed with all the powers of justices of a county, or police magistrates of a city, and will be governed in the discharge of their duties by the laws of Virginia, so far as the same are not in conflict with the laws of the United States or orders issued from these headquarters.

4. The military commissioners will make a prompt report to these headquarters of each case of which they may take jurisdiction, and of the disposition made of such case. Where parties are held for trial, either in confinement or under bail, such full statement will be made of the facts in each case as will enable the commanding general to decide whether the case shall be tried by a military commission or be brought before a civil court.

5. Trial by the civil courts will be preferred in all cases where there is satisfactory reason to believe that justice will be done. But until the orders of the commanding general are made known in any case, the paramount jurisdiction assumed by the military commissioners will be exclusive.

6. All persons, civil officers and others, are required to obey and execute the lawful orders of the military commissioners to the same extent as they are required by law to obey and execute writs issued by civil magistrates. Any person who shall disobey or resist the lawful orders or authority of a military commissioner shall be tried by a military commission, and upon conviction shall be punished by fine and imprisonment, according to the nature and degree of the offense.

General Grant versus the Attorney General

Annual Cyclopaedia, 1867, p. 51. General Grant to General E. O. C. Ord, Fifth District (Arkansas and Mississippi). Grant's letter was written after the instructions of June 20, drawn up by the attorney general, had been sent to the commanders. Grant was passing over into the radical camp. [June 28, 1867]

GENERAL: A copy of your final instructions to the Board of Registration, of June 10, 1867, is just received. I entirely dissent from the views contained in paragraph four. Your views as to the duties of registrars to register every man who will take the required oath, though they may know the applicant perjures himself, is sustained by the views of the attorney-general. My opinion is that it is the duty of the Board of Registration to see, as far as it lies in their power, that no unauthorized person is allowed to register. To secure this end registrars should be allowed to administer oaths and examine witnesses. The law, however, makes district commanders their own interpreters of their power and duty under it.

Freedom of the Press Limited

Annual Cyclopaedia, 1867, p. 758. General Schofield's directions to the editor of the Richmond Times. In each state newspapers were suppressed. [April 27, 1867]

SIR: The commanding general directs me to call your attention to an editorial article in the Richmond Times of this morning, headed, "A Black Man's Party in Virginia," and to say that while he desires not only to permit, but to encourage the utmost freedom of discussion of political questions, the character of the article referred to calls for severe censure. Especially the following words, "It is a proposition which implies that they are ready to grasp the blood stained hands of the authors of our ruin," are an intolerable insult to our soldiers of the United States Army, and no less so to all true soldiers of the late Confederate army, as they have long since extended to each other the cordial hand of friendship, and pledged their united efforts to restore peace and harmony to our whole country. The efforts of your paper to foster enmity, create disorder, and lead to violence, can no longer be tolerated. It is hoped this warning will be sufficient.

Forcing "Patriotism"

Annual Cyclopaedia, 1867, p. 693. Gen. D. E. Sickles, Second District, to Gen. H. B. Clitz, commanding Charleston, South Carolina. [1867]

It is reported to me this morning that among the various emblems borne by the several [fire] companies at the rendezvous on the citadel parade-ground the flag is not there. I desire that you will at once send for the Chief of the Fire Department, and inform him that the national standard must be borne in front of the column; that an escort of honor, to consist of two members of each company present, will be detailed by himself to march with the colors; that the colors be placed opposite the reviewing personages on the ground designated for the review, and that every person in the column shall salute the colors by lifting his hat or cap on arriving at a point three paces distant from the colors, and, carrying the cap uplifted, march past the colors to a point three paces from the same.

The Mayor of the city, the Chief of the Fire Department, and the foreman of companies will be held responsible for the observance of this order, and they are hereby authorized and required to arrest any person who disobeys it.

General Sheridan in New Orleans

Johnson MSS. Report of Ethan A. Allen to President Johnson.

[April 9, 1867]

I HAVE been here for several days and mixed much with the people and find the most perfect good will and feeling existing toward the Federal Government. There is not the slightest desire on their part to oppose the power of your Administration. The only turbulent spirits to be found here are Northern men who really appear to be in the interest of the radical element in the Eastern States; their whole aim and ambition is to ferment trouble and they are ready at any time to get up any excitement which may be damaging to the harmonious working of the Government, and make some political capital for that party in the North to the injury of the South. . . .

The removal from Office of Major Monroe here, and substitution of Heath by General Sheridan, of Lynch for Atty. Genl. in place of Herron and Howe [Horne?] for Judge of the Criminal Court in place of Abel is truly unfortunate. Judge Abel has ever been a strong and uncompromising Union man — his devotion to the Union has never faltered — he stood up manfully throughout the War for the Union, and nothing but the Union at the risk of his life during the fearful struggle through which our Country has so recently passed—he is a man of fine character and much respected and liked by the people. His removal is certainly a poor recompense for his unfaltering love of Country. Heath was one of Butler's dirty spies when that General Commanded here. In fact, Mr. President, not a single one of the three appointments made by General Sheridan are at all creditable—they are men of no status in this Community—they are not or have they ever commanded the least respect—they are Strangers whose feelings are not all identified with the interests of this City or the conciliation of the people. There are many, many good and true, respectable, and responsible men in New Orleans who could have been appointed by Genl. S. who would have been perfectly satisfactory to Citizens. Then why irritate and insult New Orleans by giving such appointments to Imported Yankees. Sheridan is becoming more and more unpopular with the people here; every day still do, and still will they submit to the Government.

Military Misrule in Alabama

MS. account, by Mrs. T. L. Kennedy. The incident here described occurred near Greensboro, Alabama. [1867]

THE negro population was very dense and Military Posts were established at intervals of 20 or 30 miles. There was one at Greensboro, Ala., and the negroes grew, under its influence, impudent beyond endurance. One day a young man, Mr. Tom Cowan, resented an insolent remark made to him by a negro passing on the street. Immediately, a Yankee officer stepped up to Mr. Cowan and slapped him in the face. The young man drew his pistol and killed the officer and . . . hid in a little, dark closet. . . . In less than 30 minutes the street was filled with a black, surging mass of howling negroes, led by the Yankee soldiers, searching for the young man. Two of his friends, by the dim light of a candle in that . . . closet, shaved off his mustache, disguised him completely, and placing him between them, boldly walked out into the mob, and un-recognized went the whole length of the town to a strip of woods, where young Cowan made his escape. The infuriated negroes soon discovered this and in retaliation they entered every white man's house and seized every gun and pistol thus placing the whites at their mercy. They also went to young Cowan's home — dragged his younger brother forth and declared their intention to keep him as a hostage and . . . to hang him if his brother did not return. . . . In view of the whole town, a tall gallows was erected for the execution of this innocent young boy. The deepest gloom and despair settled down over the whole community. . . . By chance, some one remembered having heard that General Marsh, who was stationed at a Post about 15 miles off, was a Mason. The news soon spread and the "Masons" of the town dispatched to this officer, and of course, we do not know by what means it was arranged, but if the sum of $9,000 was paid, the boy would be set free. You can form no idea of the poverty of our people after the War, but there were some who had little hoards hid away. . . . The sum exacted was raised and sent as quickly as possible. It was never known for what purpose it was demanded, unless it was used to buy off the Federal officers and soldiers. This transaction was not generally known and promptly at the hour appointed, the negro mob placed a halter around the young victim's neck — and dragged him through the streets to the fatal place. A more pathetic spectacle was never witnessed than that of the grey-haired father, walking by his son, exhorting him "To die like a man." Just as the lad was ascending the scaffold, the reprieve arrived, in the shape of an order from General Marsh forbidding the execution.

Military "Justice"

Ku Klux Report, p. 446. Letter of F. S. Lyon to F. P. Blair (1871).
Lyon was a prominent banker and had served in the Confederate Congress.
[1867-1868]

WHILE on the subject of military government among us, allow me to state to you a few cases not calculated to inspire our people with affection for their rulers. At Eutaw, in the adjoining county of Greene, [Alabama], a difficulty occurred between two individuals, one a carpet-bagger, the other a citizen, the latter charging the former with stealing his father's wood. The occurrence took place in the day-time, on a public street in the town. An attack was made by the citizen without any weapon except the fist; a number of persons rushed to the scene and some riotous demonstrations occurred; something was said about riding the assailed party on a rail, but no such thing was done, and no blow struck except by the party who brought on the controversy; no blood was drawn and no material damage done. For this offence some six or seven young men of Eutaw were arrested by military order, carried to the then military post of Selma, confined for a time in the guard-house, tried by court-martial, convicted and sentenced to confinement at hard labor at the Dry Tortugas for periods varying from six to two years. After conviction they were carried in chains and under military guard by way of Jackson Mississippi, New Orleans, and Pensacola, to the place of imprisonment. . . Their friends were not permitted to supply them with pocket money when they left. After the confinement for some time of these young men the public authorities perhaps discovered that the punishment inflicted was excessive and out of all proportion to the offence committed, and remitted the sentence. . . The men were set at liberty at the Dry Tortugas, where no transportation home was to be had except such as belonged to the Government. They were compelled to ship on a credit to a distant port, Galveston, Texas, whence they could appeal to their friends for aid.

Another case of military outrage occurred in the arrest of Mr. Barker, a worthy and industrious carriage-maker of Livingston, in Sumter County. He was arrested in his own house, in the night-time, placed in irons and sent to Selma under a military guard, and confined for a time in the military prison, the officer making the arrest refusing, . . to tell him or his friends the cause of arrest. In a short time he was discharged without a trial, when the fact was made public that he was arrested upon the supposed information of a servant in his employment. The servant, upon being examined, denied utterly having made any report or communication charging Barker with any crime whatever.

Another taste we had of military rule in time of peace grew out of the fact that the Episcopal Church edifice in this town was set on fire in the night time by United States soldiers and destroyed. . . . After the burning of the church it was ascertained that a number of articles stolen from it were in the possession of certain soldiers of a regiment stationed here. The fact was communicated to the colonel commanding the regiment, and he was requested to cause the soldiers to be arrested and the facts inquired into. This request was declined by the colonel, for the reason . . . that the men were dangerous, and might, if arrested, commit other offenses. While the regiment to which these men belonged was stationed here, it was reported that they threatened, when they left here, to burn the town. To avoid this, a colonel from another regiment came here, took command of it, placed sentinels around the quarters, and marched the men off without their knowledge that they were taking final leave. . . . About the same time, the town of Greensborough, in the adjoining county, was fired in several places by United States soldiers with the avowed purpose of destroying the place.

Another specimen of military government occurred in the arrest and robbery of an old gentleman in this neighborhood, Mr. Hatch, who is over seventy years of age. In passing on a public street in this town, I saw a soldier stop Mr. Hatch. . . . I enquired of the soldier what charge existed against Mr. Hatch. He said he was not bound to tell me. I asked him to show me his authority to make the arrest. He declined to do this, but said that he was ordered to carry Mr. Hatch to Selma, some fifty miles distant. I called at once at the office of Colonel Bowyer, who commanded here, informed him of the occurrence, and asked him to have the soldier and Mr. Hatch brought before him. . . . The soldier stated to the colonel he proposed carrying Mr. Hatch to Selma that day. Mr. Hatch offered to give security for his appearance in Selma next day, as he wished to return home to see his family, some of whom were sick, before going to Selma. The colonel advised the soldier to accede to this, which he did, and upon Mr.

Hatch's arrival in Selma in the evening he was arrested by a guard of soldiers, who proposed to march him off to a dirty guard-house. He was told he could deposit $500 for his appearance next morning. He made the deposit, took a receipt for the same, and appeared next morning. He could hear of no charge against him, was told he might go home, and that to return his $500 required the order of the commanding general, who was absent. . . From that day to this Mr. Hatch has never received his $500.

Completion of Military Reconstruction

War Department Archives, G. O. no. 100, 3d Military District. In each state the officials elected under the Reconstruction acts were appointed in place of the provisional officials and after complying with the conditions of Congress their tenure was declared permanent and the army withdrew. [July 9, 1868]

Whereas, by virtue of the Act of Congress, which became a law June 25, 1868, and of the proclamation of the Governor-elect of the State of Alabama, issued in conformity therewith, the two Houses of the Legislature are directed to assemble at Montgomery on the 13th instant; and

Whereas, in view of the fact that until the State of Alabama has complied with the requirements of the acts of Congress entitling it to representation, all governmental officers in said State are provisional and subject to the direct authority of the district commander; and

Whereas, The usual [method?] of organizing legislative bodies is in this instance impracticable:

It is ordered — 1. That the Hon. William H. Smith, Provisional Governor of the State of Alabama, proceed at 12 M., on the 13th instant, to effect such preliminary organization of both Houses of the Legislature as will enable the same to enter upon the discharge of the duties assigned them by law. 2. That before each House shall be considered legally organized, the Provisional Governor will require that, in conformity with the reconstruction acts and act which became a law June 25, 1868, each House, before proceeding to any business beyond organization, shall take measures to purge itself of all members who may be disqualified from holding office under the provisions of Section 3, of the amendment to the Constitution known as Article 14.

Military Districts Discontinued

Annual Cyclopaedia, 1868, p. 272. A War Department order. Later when Georgia was expelled, the Third Military District was revived. The First, Third, Fourth, and Fifth, were finally discontinued in 1870 after the readmission of the remaining states. [1868]

THE commanding generals in the Second, Third, Fourth and Fifth Military Districts, having officially reported that Arkansas, North Carolina, South Carolina, Louisiana, Georgia, Alabama, and Florida have complied with the reconstruction acts, including the act of June 25, 1868, and that consequently so much of the act of March 2, 1867, and all acts supplementary thereto, providing for military districts, subject to the military authority of the United States, as therein provided, have become incorporated in said States, and commanding generals have ceased exercising military powers conferred by said acts; therefore, the following changes will be made in the organization and commands of military districts and geographical departments:

First. The Second and Third military districts having ceased to exist, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, and Florida, will constitute the Department of the South, General Meade to command with headquarters at Atlanta, Georgia.

4. IN THE "BLACK AND TAN" CONVENTIONS

The Need for Carpetbaggers

Proceedings of Constitutional Convention of South Carolina, pp. 550, 553, 613. Extracts from speeches made in South Carolina convention by D. H. Chamberlain of Massachusetts, later governor of the state, and Robert De Large, negro. There had been an attempt by the "scalawags" to fix a term of residence as a prerequisite to holding office. This would shut out the "Carpetbaggers." [1868]

[D. H. Chamberlain]. . . There are reasons why men who have not been identified to South Carolina in the past, who have formed their opinions in a different atmosphere, should not only have an equal chance, but be preferred for the most important offices in the gift of the people of the State. . . There may be cases where a man who does not know but little of the State, but who has none of the prejudices against color or race, which is almost universal with the natives of the soil, . . . it is an advantage in a candidate that he should not have been born and bred on the soil of South Carolina. . . It is rather to his advantage that he was born where he could not have imbibed the prejudices of South Carolina . . . is it not better for us, in the first place, to select for the position of Governor of South Carolina a man who is familiar with the ways of freedom by birth and education . . . and, second, . . . not to narrow our choice and exclude those familiar with the ways of freedom from having a share in the offices of the State. . .

[Robert De Large]. It is showing . . . ingratitude . . . to a class of men to whom we are indebted for the privileges we are enjoying as members of this Convention, and to whom we must still continue to look for support. To be a good Governor, there is no doubt that a man should thoroughly understand the people of the State, but he need not possess more than ordinary intelligence to acquire the desired knowledge in a residence of two years. There is a class of men able and brilliant in South Carolina, who have not learned the people of the State, yet they plunged that State in rebellion, and it would take until the judgment day for them to learn the people that we represent. They are a class whom his Satanic majesty has learned, and they cannot be learned by any other influence. But any man in this State who has been here since the war, especially if a Northern man . . . is, in my judgment, sufficiently familiar with the condition of affairs to qualify him, in that respect at least, for the office of Governor. There are some who have travelled the State very extensively, especially those who belonged to Sherman's army, and they possess a degree of familiarity with the people superior to any others.

Correcting the Vocabulary of South Carolina

Proceedings of Constitutional Convention of South Carolina. Resolutions introduced by T. J. Coghlan and adopted by the convention. [1868]

Resolved, That this Convention take such action as it may in its wisdom deem compatible with its powers, and conducive to the public weal, to expunge forever from the vocabulary of South Carolina, the epithets "negro," "nigger," and "Yankee." . . .

Resolved, That the exigencies and approved civilization of the times demand that this Convention, or the Legislative body created by it, enact such laws as will make it a penal offence to use the above epithets in the manner described against an American citizen of this State, and to punish the insult by fine or imprisonment.

Lands for the Freedmen

Proceedings of Constitutional Convention of South Carolina, pp. 116, 379, 426. Speeches of F. L. Cardozo, negro; R. H. Cain, white; C. P. Leslie, white. As long as the convention was in session the question of free lands for the negroes kept coming up. [1868]

[F. L. Cardozo]. One of the greatest of slavery bulwarks was the infernal plantation system, one man owning his thousand, another his twenty, another fifty thousand acres of land. This is the only way by which we will break up that system, and I maintain that our freedom will be of no effect if we allow it to continue. What is the main cause of the prosperity of the North. It is because every man has his own farm and is free and independent. Let the lands of the South be similarly divided. I would not say for one moment they should be confiscated, but if sold to maintain the war, now that slavery is destroyed, let the plantation system go with it. We will never have true freedom until we abolish the system of agriculture which existed in the Southern States. It is useless to have any schools while we maintain the stronghold of slavery as the agricultural system of the country.

[R. H. Cain]. I believe the possession of lands and homesteads is one of the best means by which a people is made industrious, honest and advantageous to the State. I believe that it is a fact well known, that over three hundred thousand men, women and children are homeless, landless. . . How are they to live. I know the philosopher of the New York Tribune says, "root hog or die;" . . . My proposition is simply to give the hog some place to root. . . As long as people are working on shares and contracts, and at the end of the year are in debt, so long will they and the country suffer. . . If these people had homes along the lines of railroads, and the lands were divided and sold in small farms, I will guarantee our railroads will make fifty times as much money, banking systems will be advanced by virtue of the settlement of the people throughout the whole State. We want these large tracts of land cut up. . . What we need is a system of small farms. Every farmer owning his own land will feel he is in possession of something. It will have a tendency to settle the minds of the people in the State and settle many difficulties. In the rural districts now there is a constant discontent, constant misapprehension between the parties, a constant disregard for each other. . . I want these lands purchased by the Government, and the people afforded an opportunity to buy from the Government. I believe if the same amount of money that has been employed by the Bureau in feeding lazy, worthless men and women, had been expended in purchasing lands, we would to-day have no need of the Bureau. . . I propose to let the poor people buy these lands, the government to be paid back in five years time. . .

[C. P. Leslie]. We all know that the colored people want land. Night and day they think and dream of it. It is their all in all. . . I cannot but denounce those who would, for political purposes, add to their misery by raising expectations that could never be realized. The gentleman from Charleston (R. H. Cain), knew when he offered the resolution and petition he would never get a dollar. Is it right to raise the hopes of these people to have them again dashed to the earth, and made ten fold more miserable? . . . I am honest and sincere in my desire to do anything practicable, . . . but I will do nothing, even at the risk of my political position or otherwise, that I know will be a snare. Why should we deceive this people? Why allow them to return to their homes and scatter widely through the State that they are going to get a home? Each one tells the other and they tell forty more, and so it goes on causing untold mischief and exciting false hopes among the freedmen. The President, but the other day, directed the attention of the house to a letter received by General Scott, reciting the fact that certain freedmen, who have been working upon a plantation in Berkley district, refused to contract or to do anything until this Convention adjourned, and the owner had to appeal to General Scott to instruct the freedmen, and . . . a resolution was passed informing the freedmen that the Convention had no lands at their disposal.

Disfranchising Ex-Confederates in Alabama

Montgomery Mail, November 6, 1867. Speeches of E. W. Peck of New York and Tom Lee, negro, in the Alabama constitutional convention. [November 5, 1867]

[E. W. Peck]. The success and salvation of the Radical party . . . depends upon the passage by this convention of the disfranchising clauses of the majority report. I believe the majority report while . . . not rigidly . . . confined to the letter of the Reconstruction Acts, is framed in the spirit and adheres to their intent and purpose. The great object which ought to govern the action of the convention is to keep the State out of the control of disloyal men. . . The oath protects the colored people of the State effectually against any infringement of the civil and political rights which have been recently granted, and secures for Alabama perfect civil and political equality. I do not see how a man can conscientiously take that oath if he entertains any intention of depriving the colored people of the equality of the civil and political rights which they now enjoy. . . . Most of the men who had entered into the scheme of secession, I believe, have been honest, honorable, Christian men, and if they consented to take this oath they would keep it. . . . Under this oath, the Republican party would gain two votes where their enemies would get one. There were many good men who participated in the rebellion, who are now in favor of reconstruction, and would gladly take this oath. The oath does not require this class of men to renounce their belief in the right of secession, but to renounce the right. The question of secession has already been decided by the test of battle, and although some men might still believe in the original right of secession, they are . . . if they are sensible and rational, content to abide by the decision arrived at. . . . The meaning of the Reconstruction Act is undoubtedly that the State should be reconstructed by loyal men, and no man, who insists not only in the belief, but in the right of secession, ought to be regarded as a loyal man or intrusted with any political powers.

[Tom Lee]. I advocate the adoption of the minority report, because this report grants equal civil and political rights to all men, of every race and every color. This is all that I, as a colored man, can ask for my race. . . . I have no desire to take away any rights of the white man; all I want is equal rights in the court-house and equal rights when I go to vote. I think the time has come when charity and moderation should characterize the actions of all. Besides, the minority report is confined strictly to the reconstruction measures of Congress, which measures define the powers and limit the action of this convention. To go beyond these would be to endanger the ratification of the constitution formed by this convention, both by the people and by Congress, and I believe that, if the colored race do not get their rights secured without delay, . . . they will never get them.

5. OPPOSITION TO THE NEW CONSTITUTIONS

The New Constitutions

Extracts from the constitutions of Louisiana, Arkansas, and Mississippi. [1868]

Louisiana Constitution, 1868

All persons, without regard to race, color, or previous condition, born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, and residents of this State for one year, are citizens of this State. The citizens of this State owe allegiance to the United States; and this allegiance is paramount to that which they owe to the State. They shall enjoy the same civil, political and public rights and privileges, and be subject to the same pains and penalties. . .

Art. 13. All persons shall enjoy equal rights and privileges upon any conveyance of a public character; and all places of business, or of public resort, or for which a license is required by either State, parish, or municipal authority, shall be deemed places of a public character, and shall be opened to the accommodation and patronage of all persons, without distinction or discrimination on account of race or color.

Arkansas Constitution, 1868

Article VII, Sec. 5. All persons before registering or voting must take and subscribe the following oath: "I, _____, do solemnly swear, (or affirm) that I will support and maintain the Constitution and laws of the United States, and the constitution and laws of the State of Arkansas; that I will never countenance or aid in the secession of this State from the United States; that I accept the civil and political equality of all men, and agree not to attempt to deprive any person or persons, on account of race, color, or previous condition, of any political or civil right, privilege or immunity enjoyed by any other class of men; and, furthermore, that I will not in any way injure, or countenance in others any attempt to injure person or persons, on account of past or present support of the Government of the United States, the laws of the United States or the principle of the civil and political equality of all men, or for affiliation with any political party.

Mississippi Constitution, 1868

Article VII, Sec. 5. No person shall be eligible to any office of profit or trust, civil or military, in this State, who, as a member of the legislature, voted for the call of the convention that passed the ordinance of secession, or who, as a delegate to any convention, voted for or signed any ordinance of secession, or who gave voluntary aid, countenance, counsel, or encouragement to persons engaged in military hostility to the United States, or who accepted or attempted to exercise any office, civil or military, under any authority or pretended government, authority, power, or constitution, within the United States, hostile or inimical thereto, except all persons who aided reconstruction by voting for this convention, or who have continually advocated the assembling of this convention, and shall continuously and in good faith advocate the acts of the same; but the legislature shall remove such disability: Provided, That nothing in this section, except voting for or signing the ordinance of secession, shall be so construed as to exclude from office the private soldier of the late so-called Confederate States Army.

Objections to the New Constitution of South Carolina

J. S. Reynolds, Reconstruction in South Carolina, p. 93. Protest submitted to Congress by the whites of South Carolina. [1868]

INTELLIGENCE, virtue, and patriotism are to give place, in all elections, to ignorance, stupidity and vice. The superior race is to be made subservient to the inferior. Taxation and representation are no longer to be united. They who own no property are to levy taxes and make all appropriations. The property-holders have to pay these taxes without having any voice in levying them. The consequences will be, in effect, confiscation. The appropriations to support free schools for the education of the negro children, for the support of old negroes in the poor-houses, and the vicious in jails and penitentiary, together with a standing army of negro soldiers, will be crushing and utterly ruinous to the State. Every man's property will have to be sold to pay his taxes. . .

That constitution was the work of Northern adventurers, Southern renegades, and ignorant negroes. Not one per cent. of the white population of the State approves it, and not two per cent. of the negroes who voted for its adoption understand what the act of voting implied. The constitution enfranchises every male negro over the age of twenty-one, and disfranchises many of the . . . best white men of the State. The negroes being in a large numerical majority as compared with the whites, the effect is that the new constitution establishes in this State negro supremacy, with all its train of countless evils. A superior race . . . is put under the rule of an inferior race; the abject slaves of yesterday, the flushed freedmen of to-day. And think you that there can be any just, lasting reconstruction on this basis? The committee respectfully reply, in behalf of their white fellow-citizens, that this cannot be. We do not mean to threaten resistance by arms. But the white people of our State will never quietly submit to negro rule. We may have to pass under the yoke . . . but by moral agencies, by political organization, by every peaceful means left us, we will keep up this contest until we have regained the heritage of political control handed down to us by honored ancestry. This is a duty we owe to the land that is ours, to the graves that it contains, and to the race of which you and we are alike members — the proud Caucasian race, whose sovereignty on earth God has ordained, and they themselves have illustrated on the most brilliant pages of the world's history.

Whites Petition aganist Reconstruction

WE are beset by secret oath-bound political societies; our character and conduct are systematically misrepresented and magnified to you and in the newspapers of the North; the intelligent and impartial administration of just laws is obstructed ted; industry and enterprise are paralyzed by the fears of the white men and the expectations of the black that Alabama will soon be delivered over to the rule of the latter; and many of our best people are, for these reasons, leaving the homes they loved for others in strange lands. Continue over us, if you will do so, your own rule by the sword. Send down among us honorable and upright men of your own people, of the race to which you and we belong, and ungracious, contrary to wise policy and the institutions of the country, and tyrannous as it will be, no hand will be raised among us to resist by force their authority. But do not, we implore you, abdicate your rule over us, by transferring us to the blighting, brutalizing, and unnatural dominion of an alien and inferior race, a race which has never exhibited sufficient administrative ability for the good government of even the tribes into which it is broken up in its native seats; and which in all ages has itself furnished slaves for all the other races of the earth.

6. IMPEACHMENT OF THE PRESIDENT

Articles of Impeachment

Trial of Andrew Johnson, vol. i, p. 6. Nine articles were adopted on March 2, and two were added the next day. [March 2-3, 1868]

Articles exhibited by the House of Representatives of the United States, in the name of themselves and all of the people of the United States, against Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, in maintenance and support of their impeachment against him for high crimes and misdemeanors in office.

ARTICLE I

That said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, on [February 21, 1868], at Washington, in the District of Columbia, unmindful of the high duties of his office, of his oath of office, and of the requirement of the Constitution that he should take care that the laws be faithfully executed, did unlawfully, and in violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States issue an order in writing for the removal of Edwin M. Stanton from the office of Secretary for the Department of War, said Edwin M. Stanton having been theretofore duly appointed and commissioned by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, as such Secretary, and said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, on [August 12, 1867], and during the recess of said Senate, having suspended by his order Edwin M. Stanton from said office, and within twenty days after the first day of the next meeting of said Senate, that is to say, on the twelfth day of December in the year last aforesaid having reported to said Senate such suspension with the evidence and reasons for his action in the case and the name of the person designed to perform the duties of such office temporarily until the next meeting of the Senate, and said Senate thereafterwards, on [January 13, 1868], having duly considered the evidence and reasons reported by said Andrew Johnson for said suspension, and having refused to concur in said suspension, whereby and by force of the provisions of [the Tenure of Office Act, March 2, 1867], . . . said Edwin M. Stanton did forthwith resume the functions of his office, whereof the said Andrew Johnson had then and there due notice, and said Edwin M. Stanton, by reason of the premises, on said twenty-first day of February, being lawfully entitled to hold said office of Secretary for the Department of War, which said order for the removal of said Edwin M. Stanton is in substance as follows, that is to say:

“EXECUTIVE MANSION,

Washington, D. C., February 21, 1868.

“SIR: By virtue of the power and authority vested in me as President by the Constitution and laws of the United States you are hereby removed from office as Secretary for the Department of War, and your functions as such will terminate upon the receipt of this communication.

“You will transfer to Brevet Major General Lorenzo Thomas, Adjutant General of the Army, who has this day been authorized and empowered to act as Secretary of War ad interim, all records, books, papers, and other public property now in your custody and charge.

“Respectfully yours,

“ANDREW JOHNSON.

“To the Hon. EDWIN M. STANTON,

“Washington, D. C.”

Which order was unlawfully issued with intent then and there to violate the act entitled “An act regulating the tenure of certain civil offices,” passed March second, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, and with the further intent, contrary to the provisions of said act, in violation thereof, and contrary to the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, and without the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, the said Senate then and there being in session, to remove Edwin M. Stanton from the office of Secretary for the Department of War, the said Edwin M. Stanton being then and there Secretary for the Department of War, and being then and there in the due and lawful execution and discharge of the duties of said office, whereby said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, did then and there commit and was guilty of a high misdemeanor in office.

“Washington, D. C., February 21, 1868.

“SIR: The Hon. Edwin M. Stanton having been this day removed from office as Secretary for the Department of War, you are hereby authorized and empowered to act as Secretary of War ad interim, and will immediately enter upon the discharge of the duties pertaining to that office.

“Mr. Stanton has been instructed to transfer to you all the records, books, papers, and other public property now in his custody and charge.

“Respectfully yours,

“ANDREW JOHNSON.

“Adjutant General U. S. Army, Washington, D. C.”

Then and there being no vacancy in said office of Secretary for the Department of War, whereby said Andrew Johnson, . . . did then and there commit and was guilty of a high misdemeanor in office.

ARTICLE III

That said Andrew Johnson, . . . on [February 21, 1868], at Washington, in the District of Columbia, did commit and was guilty of a high misdemeanor in office in this, that, without authority of law, while the Senate of the United States was then and there in session, he did appoint one Lorenzo Thomas to be Secretary for the Department of War ad interim, without the advice and consent of the Senate, and with intent to violate the Constitution of the United States, no vacancy having happened in said office of Secretary for the Department of War during the recess of the Senate, and no vacancy existing in said office at the time, and which said appointment, so made by said Andrew Johnson, of said Lorenzo Thomas, is in substance as follows, that is to say: [Here follows the same note that is reproduced in Article II.]

ARTICLE IV

That said Andrew Johnson . . . [on February 21, 1868], at Washington, in the District of Columbia, did unlawfully conspire with one Lorenzo Thomas, and with other persons to the House of Representatives unknown, with intent, by intimidation and threats, unlawfully to hinder and prevent Edwin M. Stanton, then and there the Secretary for the Department of War, duly appointed under the laws of the United States, from holding said office of Secretary for the Department of War, contrary to and in violation of the Constitution of the United States, and of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to define and punish certain conspiracies," approved July thirty-first, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, whereby said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, did then and there commit and was guilty of a high crime in office.

ARTICLE V

That said Andrew Johnson . . . [on February 21, 1868] and on divers other days and times in said year, before [March 2, 1868], at Washington, in the District of Columbia, did unlawfully conspire with one Lorenzo Thomas, and with other persons to the House of Representatives unknown, to prevent and hinder the execution of [the Tenure of Office Act] . . . and in pursuance of said conspiracy, did unlawfully attempt to prevent Edwin M. Stanton, then and there being Secretary for the Department of War, duly appointed and commissioned under the laws of the United States, from holding said office, whereby the said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, did then and there commit and was guilty of a high misdemeanor in office.

ARTICLE VI

That said Andrew Johnson, . . . [on February 21, 1868], at Washington, in the District of Columbia, did unlawfully conspire with one Lorenzo Thomas by force to seize, take, and possess the property of the United States in the Department of War, and then and there in the custody and charge of Edwin M. Stanton, Secretary for said department, contrary to the provisions of [the Conspiracy Act, July 31, 1861] . . . and with intent to violate and disregard [the Tenure of Office Act] . . . whereby said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, did then and there commit a high crime in office.

ARTICLE VII

That said Andrew Johnson . . . [on February 21, 1868], at Washington, in the District of Columbia, did unlawfully conspire with one Lorenzo Thomas with intent unlawfully to seize, take, and possess the property of the United States, in the Department of War, in the custody and charge of Edwin M. Stanton, Secretary for said department, with intent to violate and disregard [the Tenure of Office Act] . . . whereby said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, did then and there commit a high misdemeanor in office.

ARTICLE VIII

That said Andrew Johnson, . . . with intent unlawfully to control the disbursements of the moneys appropriated for the military service and for the Department of War, on [February 21, 1868] . . . at Washington, in the District of Columbia, did unlawfully and contrary to the provisions of [the Tenure of Office Act] . . . and in violation of the Constitution of the United States, and without the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, and while the Senate was then and there in session, there being no vacancy in the office of Secretary for the Department of War, and with intent to violate and disregard the act aforesaid, then and there issue and deliver to one Lorenzo Thomas a letter of authority in writing, in substance as follows, that is to say: [Here follows the same note that is reproduced in Article II]. . .

Whereby said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, did then and there commit and was guilty of a high misdemeanor in office.

ARTICLE IX

That said Andrew Johnson . . . [on February 22, 1868] . . . at Washington, in the District of Columbia, in disregard of the Constitution and the laws of the United States duly enacted, as commander-in-chief of the army of the United States, did bring before himself then and there William H. Emory, a major general by brevet in the army of the United States, actually in command of the department of Washington and the military forces thereof, and did then and there as such commander-in-chief, declare to and instruct said Emory that part of a law of the United States, passed March second, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the army for the year ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, and for other purposes," especially the second section thereof, which provides, among other things, that "all orders and instructions relating to military operations, issued by the President or Secretary of War, shall be issued through the General of the army, and in case of inability, through the next in rank." was unconstitutional, and in contravention of the commission of said Emory, and which said provision of law had been therefore duly and legally promulgated by General Orders for the government and direction of the army of the United States, as the said Andrew Johnson then and there well knew, with intent thereby to induce said Emory, in his official capacity as commander of the department of Washington, to violate the provisions of said act, and to take and receive, act upon, and obey such orders as he, the said Andrew Johnson, might make and give, and which should not be issued through the General of the army of the United States, according to the provisions of said act, and with the further intent thereby to enable him, the said Andrew Johnson, to prevent the execution of the [Tenure of Office Act] . . . and to unlawfully prevent Edwin M. Stanton, then being Secretary for the Department of War, from holding said office and discharging the duties thereof, whereby said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, did then and there commit and was guilty of a high misdemeanor in office.

And the house of Representatives, by protestation, saving to themselves the liberty of exhibiting at any time hereafter any further articles, or other accusation or impeachment against the said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, and also of replying to his answers which he shall make unto the articles herein preferred against him, and of offering proof to the same, and every part thereof, and to every other article, accusation, or impeachment which shall be exhibited by them, as the case shall require, DO DEMAND that the said Andrew Johnson may be put to answer the high crimes and misdemeanors in office herein charged against him, and that such proceedings, examinations, trials, and judgments may be thereupon had and given as may be agreeable to law and justice.

ARTICLE X

That said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, unmindful of the high duties of his office, and the dignity and proprieties thereof, and of the harmony and courtesies which ought to exist and be maintained between the executive and legislative branches of the government of the United States, designing and intending to set aside the rightful authority and powers of Congress, did attempt to bring into disgrace, ridicule, hatred, contempt, and reproach the Congress of the United States, and the several branches thereof, to impair and destroy the regard and respect of all the good people of the United States for the Congress and legislative powers thereof, (which all officers of the government ought inviolably to preserve and maintain,) and to excite the odium and resentment of all the good people of the United States against Congress and the laws by it duly and constitutionally enacted; and in pursuance of his said design and intent, openly and publicly, and before divers assemblages of the citizens of the United States, convened in divers parts thereof to meet and receive said Andrew Johnson as the Chief Magistrate of the United States, did, on [August 18, 1866] . . . and on divers other days and times, as well before as afterward, make and deliver, with a loud voice, certain intemperate, inflammatory, and scandalous harangues, and did therein utter loud threats and bitter menaces, as well against Congress as the laws of the United States duly enacted thereby, amid the cries, jeers, and laughter of the multitudes then assembled and in hearing, which are set forth in the several specifications hereinafter written, in substance and effect, that is to say:

Specification first. — In this, that at Washington, in the District of Columbia, in the Executive Mansion, to a committee of citizens who called upon the President of the United States, speaking of and concerning the Congress of the United States, said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, heretofore, to-wit, on . . . [August 18, 1866] . . . did, in a loud voice, declare, in substance and effect, among other things, that is to say:

“So far as the executive department of the government is concerned, the effort has been made to restore the Union, to heal the breach, to pour oil into the wounds which were consequent upon the struggle, and (to speak in common phrase) to prepare, as the learned and wise physician would, a plaster healing in character and co-extensive with the wound. We thought, and we think, that we had partially succeeded; but, as the work progresses, as reconstruction seemed to be taking place, and the country was becoming reunited, we found a disturbing and marring element opposing us. In alluding to that element I shall go no further than your convention, and the distinguished gentleman who has delivered to me the report of its proceedings. I shall make no reference to it that I do not believe the time and occasion justify.

“We have witnessed in one department of the government

every endeavor to prevent the restoration of peace, harmony and union. We have seen hanging upon the verge of the government, as it were, a body called, or which assumed to be, the Congress of the United States, while, in fact, it is a Congress of only a part of the States. We have seen the Congress pretend to be for the Union, when its every step and act tended to perpetuate disunion and make a disruption of the States inevitable. . . . We have seen Congress gradually encroach, step by step, upon constitutional rights, and violate, day after day and month after month, fundamental principles of the government. We have seen a Congress that seemed to forget that there was a limit to the sphere and scope of legislation. We have seen a Congress in a minority assume to exercise power which, allowed to be consummated, would result in despotism or monarchy itself."

Specification second. — In this, that at Cleveland in the State of Ohio, heretofore, to-wit, on . . . [September 3, 1866] . . . before a public assemblage of citizens and others, said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, speaking of and concerning the Congress of the United States, did, in a loud voice, declare, in substance and effect, among other things, that is to say:

"I will tell you what I did do. I called upon your Congress that is trying to break up the government. . . .

"In conclusion, beside that, Congress had taken much pains to poison their constituents against him. But what had Congress done? Have they done anything to restore the union of these States? No; on the contrary, they have done everything to prevent it; and because he stood now where he did when the rebellion commenced, he had been denounced as a traitor. Who had run greater risks or made greater sacrifices than himself? But Congress, factious and domineering, had undertaken to poison the minds of the American people."

Specification third. — In this, that at St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, heretofore, to-wit, on . . . [September 8, 1866] . . . before a public assemblage of citizens and others, said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, speaking of and concerning the Congress of the United States, did, in a loud voice, declare in substance and effect, among other things, that is to say:

“Go on. Perhaps if you had a word or two on the subject of New Orleans you might understand more about it than you do. And if you will go back — if you will go back and ascertain the cause of the riot at New Orleans, perhaps you will not be so prompt in calling out ‘New Orleans.’ If you will take up the riot at New Orleans, and trace it back to its source or its immediate cause, you will find out who is responsible for the blood that was shed there. If you will take up the riot at New Orleans and trace it back to the radical Congress, you will find that the riot at New Orleans was substantially planned. If you will take up the proceedings in their caucusses you will understand that they there knew that a convention was to be called which was extinct by its power having expired; that it was said that the intention was that a new government was to be organized, and on the organization of that government the intention was to enfranchise one portion of the population, called the colored population, who had just been emancipated, and at the same time disfranchise white men. When you design to talk about New Orleans you ought to understand what you are talking about. When you read the speeches that were made, and take up the facts on the Friday and Saturday before the convention sat, you will there find that speeches were made incendiary in their character, exciting that portion of the population, the black population, to arm themselves and prepare for the shedding of blood. You will also find that the convention did assemble in violation of law, and the intention of that convention was to supersede the reorganized authorities in the State government of Louisiana, which had been recognized by the government of the United States; and every man engaged in that rebellion in that convention, with the intent of superseding and overturning the civil government which had been recognized by the government of the United States, I say that he was a traitor to the Constitution of the United States, and hence you find that another rebellion was commenced, having its origin in the radical Congress. . .

“So much for the New Orleans riot. And there was the cause and the origin of the blood that was shed, and every drop of blood that was shed is upon their skirts, and they are responsible for it. I could test this thing a little closer, but will not do it here tonight. But when you talk about the causes and consequences that resulted from proceedings of that kind, perhaps, as I have been introduced here, and you have provoked questions of this kind, though it does not provoke me, I will tell you a few wholesome things that have been done by this radical Congress in connection with New Orleans and the extension of the elective franchise.

“I know that I have been traduced and abused. I know it has come in advance of me here as elsewhere, that I have attempted to exercise an arbitrary power in resisting laws that were intended to be forced upon the government; that I had exercised that power; that I had abandoned the party that elected me, and that I was a traitor, because I exercised the veto power in attempting, and did arrest for a time, a bill that was called a ‘Freedman’s Bureau’ bill; yes, that I was a traitor. And I have been traduced, I have been slandered, I have been maligned, I have been called Judas Iscariot, and all that. Now, my countrymen, here to-night, it is very easy to indulge in epithets; it is easy to call a man Judas and cry out traitor; but when he is called upon to give arguments and facts he is very often found wanting. Judas Iscariot — Judas. There was a Judas, and he was one of the twelve apostles. Oh! yes, the twelve apostles had a Christ. The twelve apostles had a Christ, and he never could have had a Judas unless he had had twelve apostles. If I have played the Judas, who has been my Christ that I have played the Judas with? Was it Thad. Stevens? Was it Wendell Phillips? Was it Charles Sumner? These are the men that stop and compare themselves with the Saviour; and everybody that differs with them in opinion, and to try to stay and arrest their diabolical and nefarious policy, is to be denounced as a Judas. . .

“Well, let me say to you, if you will stand by me in this action, if you will stand by me in trying to give the people a fair chance — soldiers and citizens — to participate in these offices, God being willing, with your help, I will kick them out. I will kick them out just as fast as I can.

“Let me say to you, in concluding, that what I have said I intended to say. I was not provoked into this, and I care not for their menaces, the taunts, and the jeers. I care not for threats. I do not intend to be bullied by my enemies nor overawed by my friends. But, God willing, with your help, I will veto their measures when any of them come to me.”

Which said utterances, declarations, threats, and harangues, highly censurable in any, are peculiarly indecent and unbecoming in the Chief Magistrate of the United States, by means whereof said Andrew Johnson has brought the high office of the President of the United States into contempt, ridicule, and disgrace, to the great scandal of all good citizens, whereby said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, did commit, and was then and there guilty of a high misdemeanor in office.

ARTICLE XI

That said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, unmindful of the high duties of his office, and of his oath of office, and in disregard of the Constitution and laws of the United States, did, heretofore, to-wit, on the eighteenth day of August, A. D. eighteen hundred and sixty-six, at the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, by public speech, declare and affirm, in substance, that the thirty-ninth Congress of the United States was not a Congress of the United States authorized by the Constitution to exercise legislative power under the same, but on the contrary, was a Congress of only a part of the United States, thereby denying, and intending to deny, the power of the said thirty-ninth Congress to propose amendments to the Constitution of the United States; and in pursuance of said declaration, the said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, afterwards, to-wit, on [February 21, 1868] . . at the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, did unlawfully, and in disregard of the requirements of the Constitution, that he should take care that the laws be faithfully executed, attempt to prevent the execution of [the Tenure of Office Act] . . by unlawfully devising and contriving, and attempting to devise and contrive means by which he should prevent Edwin M. Stanton from forthwith resuming the functions of the office of Secretary for the Department of War; and, also, by further unlawfully devising and contriving, and attempting to devise and contrive means, then and there, to prevent the execution of . . [the Army Appropriation Act and the Reconstruction Act, both of March 2, 1867] . . whereby the said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, did, then, to-wit, on . . [February 21, 1868] . . at the city of Washington, commit, and was guilty of, a high misdemeanor in office.

SCHUYLER COLFAX,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Attest:

EDWARD MCPHERSON,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Charles Sumner's Opinion

Trial of Andrew Johnson, vol. iii, pp. 247, 257, 258. Each senator was permitted to file a written statement explaining his votes in the impeachment trial. Several availed themselves of this privilege. Sumner's is the most interesting. [1868]

THIS is one of the last great battles with slavery. Driven from these legislative chambers, driven from the field of war, this monstrous power has found a refuge in the Executive Mansion, where, in utter disregard of the Constitution and laws, it seeks to exercise its ancient far-reaching sway. . . Andrew Johnson is the impersonation of the tyrannical slave power. In him it lives again. He is the lineal successor of John C. Calhoun and Jefferson Davis; and he gathers about him the same supporters. Original partisans of slavery north and south; habitual compromisers of great principles; maligners of the Declaration of Independence; politicians without heart; lawyers, for whom a technicality is everything, and a promiscuous company who at every stage of the battle have set their faces against equal rights; these are his allies. It is the old troop of slavery, with a few recruits, ready as of old for violence — cunning in device, and heartless in quibble. With the President at their head, they are now entrenched in the Executive Mansion.

Not to dislodge them is to leave the country a prey to one of the most hateful tyrannies of history. Especially is it to surrender the Unionists of the rebel States to violence and bloodshed. Not a month, not a week, not a day should be lost. The safety of the Republic requires action at once. The lives of innocent men must be rescued from sacrifice.

I would not in this judgment depart from that moderation which belongs to the occasion; but God forbid that, when called to deal with so great an offender, I should affect a coldness which I cannot feel. Slavery has been our worst enemy, assailing all, murdering our children, filling our homes with mourning, and darkening the land with tragedy; and now it rears its crest anew, with Andrew Johnson as its representative. Through him it assumes once more to rule the Republic and to impose its cruel law. The enormity of his conduct is aggravated by his barefaced treachery. He once declared himself the Moses of the colored race. Behold him now the Pharaoh. With such treachery in such a cause there can be no parley. Every sentiment, every conviction, every vow against slavery must now be directed against him. Pharaoh is at the bar of the Senate for judgment. . .

There is nothing of usurpation which he has not attempted. Beginning with an assumption of all power in the rebel States, he has shrunk from nothing in the maintenance of this unparalleled assumption. . . Timid at first, he grew bolder and bolder. He saw too well that his attempt to substitute himself for Congress in the work of reconstruction was sheer usurpation, and therefore, by his Secretary of State, did not hesitate to announce that "it must be distinctly understood that the restoration will be subject to the decision of Congress."

On two separate occasions, in July and September, 1865, he confessed the power of Congress over the subject; but when Congress came together in December, this confessor of congressional power found that he alone had this great prerogative. According to his new-fangled theory, Congress had nothing to do but admit the States with the governments which had been instituted through his will alone. It is difficult to measure the vastness of this usurpation, involving as it did a general nullification. Strafford was not bolder, when, speaking for Charles I., he boasted that "the little finger of prerogative was heavier than the loins of the law;" but these words helped the proud minister to the scaffold. No monarch, no despot, no Sultan, could claim more than an American President; for he claimed all. By his edict alone governments were organized, taxes were levied, and even the franchises of the citizens were determined.

Had this assumption of power been incidental, for the exigency of the moment, as under the pressure of war, and especially to serve the cause of human rights, to which before his elevation the President had professed such vociferous devotion, it might have been pardoned. It would have passed into the chapter of unauthorized acts which a patriot people had condoned. But it was the opposite in every particular. Beginning and continuing in usurpation, it was hateful beyond pardon, because it sacrificed the rights of Unionists, white and black, and was in the interest of the rebellion and of those very rebels who had been in arms against their country.

More than one person was appointed provisional governor who could not take the oath of office required by act of Congress. Other persons in the same predicament were appointed in the revenue service. The effect of these appointments was disastrous. They were in the nature of notice to rebels everywhere, that participation in the rebellion was no bar to office. If one of their number could be appointed governor, if another could be appointed to a confidential position in the Treasury Department, then there was nobody on the long list of blood who might not look for preferment. And thus all offices from governor to constable were handed over to a disloyal scramble. Rebels crawled forth from their retreats. Men who had hardly ventured to expect their lives were now candidates for office, and the rebellion became strong again. The change was felt in all the gradations of government, whether in States, counties, towns, or villages. Rebels found themselves in places of trust, while the true-hearted Unionists, who had watched for the coming of our flag and ought to have enjoyed its protecting power, were driven into hiding-places. All this was under the auspices of Andrew Johnson. It was he who animated the wicked crew. He was at the head of the work. Loyalty everywhere was persecuted. White and black, whose only offence was that they had been true to their country, were insulted, abused, murdered. There was no safety for the loyal man except within the flash of our bayonets. The story is as authentic as hideous. More than two thousand murders have been reported in Texas alone since the surrender of Kirby Smith. In other States there was a similar carnival. Property, person, life, were all in jeopardy. Acts were done "to make a holiday in hell." At New Orleans there was a fearful massacre, which, considering the age and the place, was worse than that of St. Bartholomew, which darkens a century of France, or that of Glencoe, which has printed an ineffaceable stain upon one of the greatest reigns of English history. All this is directly traced to Andrew Johnson. The words of bitterness uttered at another time are justified, while Fire, Famine, and Slaughter shriek forth—

He let me loose, and cried Halloo!
To him alone the praise is due.

. . . The Freedman's Bureau, that sacred charity of the Republic, was despoiled of its possessions for the sake of rebels, to whom their forfeited estates were given back after they had been vested by law in the United States. The proceeds of captured and abandoned property, lodged under the law in the national treasury, were ravished from their place of deposit and sacrificed. Rebels were allowed to fill the ante-chambers of the Executive Mansion and to enter into his counsels. The pardoning power was prostituted, and pardons were issued in lots to suit rebels, thus grossly abusing that trust whose discreet exercise is so essential to the administration of justice. The powers of the senate over appointments were trifled with and disregarded by reappointing persons who had been already rejected, and by refusing to communicate the names of others appointed by him during the recess. The veto power conferred by the Constitution as a remedy for ill-considered legislation, was turned by him into a weapon of offence against Congress and into an instrument to beat down the just opposition which his usurpation had aroused. The power of removal, which patriot Presidents had exercised so sparingly, was seized as an engine of tyranny and openly employed to maintain his wicked purposes by the sacrifice of good citizens who would not consent to be his tools. Incompetent and dishonest creatures, whose only recommendation was that they echoed his voice, were appointed to office, especially in the collection of the internal revenue, through whom a new organization, known as the "Whiskey Ring," has been able to prevail over the government and to rob the treasury of millions at the cost of tax-paying citizens, whose burdens are thus increased. Laws enacted by Congress for the benefit of the colored race, including that great statute for the establishment of the Freedmen's Bureau, and that other great statute for the establishment of Civil Rights were first attacked by his veto, and when finally passed by the requisite majority over his veto, were treated by him as little better than dead letters, while he boldly attempted to prevent the adoption of a constitutional amendment, by which the right of citizens and the national debt were placed under the guarantee of irrevocable law. During these successive assumptions, usurpations, and tyrannies, utterly without precedent in our history, this deeply guilty man ventured upon public speeches, each an offence to good morals, where, lost to all shame, he appealed in coarse words to the coarse passions of the coarsest people, scattering firebrands of sedition, inflaming anew the rebel spirit, insulting good citizens and with regard to office-holders, announcing in his own characteristic phrase that he would "kick them out" — the whole succession of speeches being from their brutalities and indecencies, in the nature of a "criminal exposure of his person," indictable at common law, for which no judgment can be too severe. But even this revolting transgression is aggravated, when it is considered that through these utterances the cause of justice was imperiled and the accursed demon of civil feud was lashed again into vengeful fury. All these things from beginning to end are plain facts, already recorded in history and known to all. And it is further recorded in history and known to all, that, through these enormities, any one of which is enough for condemnation, while all together present an aggregation of crime, untold calamities have been brought upon our country; disturbing business and finance; diminishing the national revenues; postponing specie payments; dishonoring the Declaration of Independence in its grandest truths; arresting the restoration of the rebel States; reviving the dying rebellion, and instead of that peace and reconciliation so much longed for, sowing strife and wrong, whose natural fruit is violence and blood.

7. READMISSION OF STATES: FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT

Arkansas Readmitted

Acts and Resolutions, 40 Cong., 2 Sess., p. 43. Passed over the veto. [June 22, 1868]

WHEREAS the people of Arkansas, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the more efficient government of the rebel States," passed March 2, 1867, and the acts supplementary thereto, have framed and adopted a constitution of State government, which is republican, and the legislature of said State has duly ratified the amendment to the Constitution of the United States proposed by the thirty-ninth Congress, and known as Article fourteen; Therefore,

Be it enacted . . . That the State of Arkansas is entitled and admitted to representation in Congress, as one of the States of the Union, upon the following fundamental condition: That the constitution of Arkansas shall never be so amended or changed as to deprive any citizen or class of citizens of the United States of the right to vote who are entitled to vote by the constitution herein recognized, except as a punishment for such crimes as are now felonies at common law, whereof they shall have been duly convicted, under laws equally applicable to all inhabitants of said State.

Six More States Readmitted

Acts and Resolutions, 40 Cong., 2 Sess., p. 44. Passed over the veto. Georgia was soon expelled. In Mississippi, Virginia, and Texas, the new constitutions had not been adopted. Alabama was readmitted though the new constitution had been rejected. [June 25, 1868]

WHEREAS the people of North Carolina, South Carolina, Louisiana, Georgia, Alabama, and Florida have, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the more efficient government of the rebel States," passed March 2, 1867, and the acts supplementary thereto, framed constitutions of State government which are republican, and have adopted said constitutions by large majorities of the votes cast at the elections held for the ratification or rejection of the same: therefore,

Be it enacted . . . That each of the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Louisiana, Georgia, Alabama, and Florida, shall be entitled and admitted to representation in Congress as a State of the Union when the Legislature of such State shall have duly ratified the amendment to the Constitution of the United States proposed by the thirty-ninth Congress, and known as Article fourteen, upon the following fundamental conditions: That the constitution of neither of said States shall ever be so amended or changed, as to deprive any citizen or class of citizens of the United States of the right to vote in said State who are entitled to vote by the constitution thereof herein recognized, except as a punishment for such crimes as are now felonies at common law, whereof they shall have been duly convicted under laws equally applicable to all the inhabitants of said State . . . and the State of Georgia shall only be entitled and admitted to representation upon this further fundamental condition; that the first and third subdivisions of section seventeen of the fifth article of the constitution of said State, except the proviso to the first subdivision, shall be null and void, and that the general assembly of said State, by solemn public act, shall declare the assent of the State to the foregoing fundamental condition.

Sec. 2. That if the day fixed for the first meeting of the Legislature of either of said States by the constitution or ordinance thereof, shall have passed, or have so nearly arrived before the passage of this act that there shall not be time for the Legislature to assemble at the period fixed, such legislature shall convene at the end of twenty days from the time this act takes effect unless the governor-elect shall sooner convene the same.

Sec. 3. That the first section of this act shall take effect as to each State, except Georgia, when such State shall by its legislature duly ratify Article fourteen of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States, proposed by the Thirty-Ninth Congress, and as to the State of Georgia when it shall in addition give the assent of said State to the fundamental condition heretofore imposed upon the same; and thereupon the officers of each State, duly elected and qualified under the constitution thereof, shall be inaugurated without delay; but no person prohibited from holding office under the United States or under any State by section three of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States known as Article fourteen shall be deemed eligible to any office in either of said States unless relieved from disability as provided in said amendment; and it is hereby made the duty of the President within ten days after receiving official information of the ratification of said amendment by the Legislature of either of said States, to issue a proclamation announcing that fact.

The Fourteenth Amendment

Acts and Resolutions. 39 Cong., 1 Sess., p. 406. Joint resolution proposing the Amendment passed Congress June 13, 1866, but was not sent to the President. It was ratified by the requisite number of states and proclaimed. [July 28, 1868]

ARTICLE XIV

Sec. 1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty or property, without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Sec. 2. Representatives shall be appointed among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in said State.

Sec. 3. No Person shall be Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President or Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State Legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may, by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

Sec. 4. The validity of the public debt of the United States, authorized by law, including debts incurred for payment of pensions and bounties for services in suppressing insurrection or rebellion, shall not be questioned. But neither the United States nor any State shall assume or pay any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States or any claim for the loss or emancipation of any slave; but all such debts, obligations, and claims shall be held illegal and void.

Sec. 5. The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.

8. RECONSTRUCTION THE ISSUE IN THE CAMPAIGN OF 1868

The Republican Platform on Reconstruction

McPherson, History of Reconstruction, p. 364.

[May 21, 1868]

1. We congratulate the country on the assured success of the reconstruction policy of Congress, as evinced by the adoption, in the majority of the States lately in rebellion, of Constitutions securing equal civil and political rights to all; and it is the duty of the Government to sustain those institutions and to prevent the people of such States from being remitted to a state of anarchy.

2. The guaranty by Congress of equal suffrage to all the loyal men at the South was demanded by every consideration of public safety, of gratitude, and of justice, and must be maintained; while the question of suffrage in all the loyal States properly belongs to the people of those States. . .

8. We profoundly deplore the untimely and tragic death of Abraham Lincoln, and regret the accession to the Presidency of Andrew Johnson, who has acted treacherously to the people who elected him and the cause he was pledged to support; who has usurped high legislative and judicial functions; who has refused to execute the laws; who has used his high office to induce other officers to ignore and violate the laws; who has employed his executive powers to render insecure the property, the peace, liberty, and life, of the citizen; who has abused the pardoning power; who has denounced the national legislature as unconstitutional; who has persistently and corruptly resisted, by every means in his power, every proper attempt at the reconstruction of the States lately in rebellion; who has perverted the public patronage into an engine of wholesale corruption; and who has been justly impeached for high crimes and misdemeanors, and properly pronounced guilty thereof by the vote of thirty-five Senators. . .

13. That we highly recommend the spirit of magnanimity and forbearance with which men who have served in the rebellion, but who now frankly and honestly coöperate with us in restoring the peace of the country and reconstructing the southern State governments upon the basis of impartial justice and equal rights, are received back into the communion of the loyal people; and we favor the removal of the disqualifications and restrictions imposed upon the late rebels in the same measure as the spirit of disloyalty shall die out, and as may be consistent with the safety of the loyal people.

The Democratic Platform on Reconstruction

McPherson, History of Reconstruction, p. 367.

[July, 1868]

THE Democratic Party . . . standing upon the Constitution as the foundation and limitation of the powers of the Government, and the guarantee of the liberties of the citizen, and recognizing the questions of slavery and secession as having been settled . . . by the war or the voluntary action of Southern States in constitutional convention assembled, and never to be renewed or to be reagitated, do with the return of peace, demand:

First — Immediate restoration of all the States to their rights in the Union under the Constitution, and of civil government to the American people.

Second — Amnesty for all past political offenses, and the regulation of the elective franchise in the States by their citizens. . .

In demanding these measures and reforms, we arraign the Radical party for its disregard of right, and the unparalleled oppression and tyranny which have marked its career.

After the most solemn and unanimous pledge of both Houses of Congress to prosecute the war exclusively for the maintenance of the Government and the preservation of the Union under the Constitution, it has repeatedly violated that most sacred pledge. . . Instead of restoring the Union, it has, so far as in its power, dissolved it, and subjected ten States, in time of profound peace, to military despotism and negro supremacy. It has nullified there the right of trial by jury; it has abolished the habeas corpus, that most sacred writ of liberty; it has overthrown the freedom of speech and the press; it has substituted arbitrary seizures and arrests, and military trials and secret star-chamber inquisitions for the constitutional tribunals; it has disregarded in time of peace the rights of the people to be free from searches and seizures; it has entered the post and telegraph offices, and even the private rooms of individuals, and seized their private papers and letters without any specific charge or notice of affidavit, as required by the organic law; it has converted the American Capitol into a bastille; it has established a system of spies and official espionage to which no constitutional monarchy of Europe would now dare to resort; it has abolished the right of appeal on important constitutional questions to the supreme judicial tribunals, and threatens to curtail or destroy its original jurisdiction, which is irrevocably vested by the Constitution, while the learned Chief Justice has been subjected to the most atrocious calumnies, merely because he would not prostitute his high office to the support of the false and partisan charges preferred against the President. Its corruption and extravagance have exceeded anything known in history, and, by its frauds and monopolies, it has nearly doubled the burden of the debt created by the war. It has stripped the President of his constitutional power of appointment, even of his own cabinet. . . .

And we do declare and resolve that ever since the people of the United States threw off all subjection to the British Crown the privilege and trust of suffrage have belonged to the several States, and have been granted, regulated and controlled exclusively by the political power of each State respectively, and that any attempt by Congress, on any pretext whatever, to deprive any State of this right, or to interfere with its exercise, is a flagrant usurpation of power which can find no warrant in the Constitution, and, if sanctioned by the people, will subvert our form of government, and can only end in a centralized and consolidated government, in which the separate existence of the States will be entirely absorbed, and an unqualified despotism be established in place of a Federal Union of co-equal States.

And that we regard the reconstruction acts (so-called) of

Views of F. P. Blair

Annual Cyclopaedia, 1868, p. 752. Blair was Democratic candidate for the vice-presidency and by his freedom of speech embarrassed his party. The real issue was somewhat as he stated it: Should the Reconstruction be completed or rejected? [1868]

THE issues upon which the contest turns are clear, and cannot be obscured or distorted by the sophistries of our adversaries. They all resolve themselves into the old and ever-renewing struggle of a few men to absorb the political power of the nation. This effort, under every conceivable name and disguise, has always characterized the opponents of the Democratic party, but at no time has the attempt assumed a shape so open and daring as in this contest. The adversaries of free and constitutional government, in defiance of the expressed language of the Constitution, have erected a military despotism in ten of the States of the Union, have taken from the President the powers vested in him by the supreme law, and have deprived the Supreme Court of its jurisdiction. The right of trial by jury, and the great writ of right, — the habeas-corpus — shields of safety for every citizen, and which have descended to us from the earliest transitions of our ancestors, and which our Revolutionary fathers sought to secure to their posterity forever in the fundamental charter of our liberties — have been ruthlessly trampled under foot by the fragment of a Congress. Whole States and communities of people of our own race have been attainted, convicted, condemned, and deprived of their rights as citizens, without presentment, or trial, or witnesses, but by congressional enactment of ex post facto laws, and in defiance of the constitutional prohibition denying even to a full and legal Congress the authority to pass any bill of attainder, or ex post facto law. The same usurping authority has substituted as electors in the place of the men of our own race, thus illegally attainted and disfranchised, a host of ignorant negroes, who are supported in idleness with the public money, and combined together to strip the white race of their birthright, through the management of Freedmen's Bureaus and the emissaries of conspirators in other States; and, to complete the oppression, the military power of the nation has been placed at their disposal, in order to make this barbarism supreme.

The military leader under whose prestige this usurping Congress has taken refuge since the condemnation of their schemes by the free people of the North in the elections of the last year, and whom they have selected as their candidate to shield themselves from the result of their own wickedness and crime, has announced his acceptance of the nomination, and his willingness to maintain their usurpations over eight millions of people at the South, fixed to the earth with his bayonets. He exclaims: "Let us have peace." "Peace reigns in Warsaw" was the announcement which heralded the doom of the liberties of the nation. "The empire is peace," exclaimed Bonaparte, when freedom and its defenders expired under the sharp edge of his sword. The peace to which Grant invites us is the peace of despotism and death.

The Issue in the South

Annual Cyclopaedia, 1868, p. 432. Resolutions adopted by the Democratic State Central Committee of Louisiana. [March 6, 1868]

Whereas, The people of Louisiana are immediately threatened with the consummation of a policy involving their degradation and ruin, promising the destruction of their material interests, intending the overthrow of all constitutional safeguards, aiming at the perversion of every social, educational, and governmental institution, and obliterating every vestige of American civilization in this State, for the notorious purpose of recuperating the waning fortunes and maintaining the supremacy of a dis-trusted, ambitious, and vindictive party; and

Whereas, It is the duty of every citizen to lend his energy and influence to every effort, and his voice to every protest against the imminent consummation of a scheme so audacious, revolutionary, and destructive, the incipient consequences of which have been beggary, wretchedness, and starvation, and the fomenting of bitter animosities, and the matured results of which will be debasing despotism, or licentious anarchy, disgraceful to the country which tolerates, and ruinous to the people who endure it: therefore be it

Resolved, That we invite all conservative citizens, regardless of past political attachments or differences, to unite with the national Democratic party in the State and throughout the South. . .

We will unite with the national Democratic party in any policy which may be adopted to preserve the threatened integrity of the Executive and Judicial Departments of the Government, and to counteract the designs of a relentless and tyrannical party to subvert the Constitution and to convert our republican and democratic institutions into a centralized despotism erected on the ruins of public liberty, personal rights, and the sovereignty of the States.

Southern Whites to the Negroes

J. S. Reynolds, Reconstruction in South Carolina, p. 90. Democratic "Address to the Colored People of South Carolina." [1868]

YOUR present power must soon pass from you. Nothing that it builds will stand and nothing will remain of it but the prejudices it may create. It is therefore a most dangerous tool that you are handling. Your leaders, both black and white, are using your votes for nothing but their individual gain. Many of them you have only known heretofore to despise and distrust, until commanded by your Leagues to vote for them. Offices and salaries for themselves are the heights of their ambition. . . Already they have driven away all capital and credit from the South; and . . . thousands among you are thrown out of employment and starve simply for lack of work. What few enterprises are carried on are the work of Southern men who have faith that the present state of affairs is but temporary. . .

We therefore urge and warn you, by all the ties of our former relations still strong and binding in thousands of cases, by a common Christianity and by the mutual welfare of our two races, whom Providence has thrown together, to beware of the course on which your leaders are urging you in a blind folly which will surely ruin both you and them.

We do not pretend to be better friends to your race than we are to ourselves, and we only speak when we are not invited because your welfare concerns ours. If you destroy yourselves you injure us, and though but little as compared to the harm you will do yourselves we would if we could avert the whole danger.

We are not in any condition to make to you any promises or to propose to you any compromises. We can do nothing but await the course of events — but this we do without the slightest apprehension or misgiving for ourselves. We shall not give up our country, and time will soon restore our control of it. But we earnestly caution you and beg you in the meanwhile to beware of the use you make of your temporary power. Remember that your race has nothing to gain and everything to lose if you invoke that prejudice of race which since the world was made has ever driven the weaker tribe to the wall. Forsake, then, the wicked and stupid men who would involve you in this folly, and make to yourselves friends and not enemies of the white citizens of South Carolina.

9. RECONSTRUCTION COMPLETED

Republican Converts in Virginia

Talbot, S. C. Armstrong, p. 144. Letter of S. C. Armstrong on the political situation. Armstrong was then at work at Hampton. This extract is used by permission of Mrs. Talbot and of Doubleday, Page and Co. [1869]

REPUBLICANS are increasing [in Virginia] since the election of Grant, and several southern gentlemen about here are much more radical than I. "When the devil was sick the devil a monk would be; when the devil was well the devil a monk was he." Scores are getting down off the fence and are rushing wildly to the Republican lines and already begin to talk of what they have suffered for their principles. I was buttonholed this evening by a devoted radical lately converted, who has confidential talks with darkies "behind houses and around corners" and was bored with an address upon "the party," — its principles and its meanest men, swallowed without a gulp — without a wink. They are good, noble dogs and "yaller" mean dogs. So there are yellow dogs, humanly speaking, who roll over on their backs figuratively and wag their tails at the rulers of the hour.

New Constitutions of Virginia, Mississippi, and Texas

Statutes at Large, vol. xvi. p. 40. In Mississippi the Constitution had been rejected. [April 10, 1869]

Be it enacted . . . That the President of the United States, at such time as he may deem best for the public interest, may submit the constitution which was framed by the convention which met in Richmond, Virginia, on Tuesday, the third day of December, [1867,] to the voters of said State, registered at the date of said submission, for ratification or rejection, and may also submit to a separate vote such provisions of said constitution as he may deem best, such vote to be taken either upon each of the said provisions alone, or in connection with the other portions of said constitution, as the President may direct.

Sec. 2. . . . At the same election the voters of said State may vote for and elect members of the General Assembly of said State, and all the officers of said State provided for by said constitution, and members of Congress; and the officer commanding the district of Virginia shall cause the lists of registered voters of said State to be revised, enlarged, and corrected prior to such election, according to law, and for that purpose may appoint such registrars as he may deem necessary. And said elections shall be held, and returns thereof made in the manner provided by the acts of Congress commonly called the reconstruction acts.

Secs. 3 and 4. . . [Similar procedure authorized for Texas and Mississippi.]

Sec. 5. . . If either of the said constitutions shall be ratified at such election, the legislature of the State so ratifying, elected as provided for in this act, shall assemble at the capital of said State on the fourth Tuesday after the official promulgation of such ratification by the military officer commanding in said State.

Sec. 6. . . Before the States of Virginia, Mississippi, and Texas shall be admitted to representation in Congress, their several legislatures, which may be hereafter lawfully organized, shall ratify the fifteenth article which has been proposed by Congress to the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Sec. 7. . . The proceedings in any of the said States shall not be deemed final or operate as a complete restoration thereof, until their action respectively, shall be approved by Congress.

Virginia Readmitted

Statutes at Large, vol. xvi, p. 62. Mississippi was readmitted on February 23, and Texas on March 30, 1870. The organization of the militia in these states was still prohibited however.

[January 26, 1870]

WHEREAS the people of Virginia have framed and adopted a constitution of State government which is republican; and whereas the Legislature of Virginia elected under said constitution have ratified the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States; and whereas the performance of these several acts in good faith was a condition precedent to the representation of the State in Congress: Therefore

Be it enacted, . . . That the said State of Virginia is entitled to representation in Congress of the United States: Provided, That before any member of the legislature of said State shall take or resume his seat, or any officer of said State shall enter upon the duties of his office, he shall take and subscribe, and file in the office of the Secretary of State of Virginia, for permanent preservation, an oath in the form following: "I, ———, do solemnly swear that I have never taken an oath as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the constitution of the United States, and afterwards engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof; so help me God;" or such person shall in like manner take, subscribe, and file the following oath: "I, ——— do solemnly swear that I have by act of Congress of the United States been relieved from the disabilities imposed upon me by the fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States; so help me God." . . . And any person who shall knowingly swear falsely in taking either of such oaths shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and shall be punished therefor by imprisonment not less than one year and not more than ten years, and shall be fined not less than one thousand dollars and not more than ten thousand dollars. . . . And provided further, That every such person who shall neglect for the period of thirty days next after the passage of this act to take, subscribe, and file such oath as aforesaid, shall be deemed and taken to all intents and purposes, to have vacated his office: And provided further, That the State of Virginia is admitted to representation in Congress as one of the States of the Union upon the following fundamental conditions: First, That the constitution of Virginia shall never be so amended or changed as to deprive any citizen or class of citizens of the United States of the right to vote who are entitled to vote by the constitution herein recognized, except as a punishment for such crimes as are now felonies at common law, whereof they shall have been duly convicted under laws equally applicable to all the inhabitants of said State: Provided, That any alteration of said constitution, prospective in its effects, may be made in regard to the time and place of residence of voters. Second, That it shall never be lawful for the said State to deprive any citizen of the United States, on account of his race, color or previous condition of servitude, of the right to hold office under the constitution and laws of said State, or upon any such ground to require of him any other qualifications for office than such as are required of all other citizens. Third, That the constitution of Virginia shall never be so amended or changed as to deprive any citizen or class of citizens of the United States of the school rights and privileges secured by the constitution of said State.

Georgia Reconstructed a Second Time

Acts and Resolutions, 40 Cong., 2 Sess., p. 3. The Georgia legislature elected under the Reconstruction acts unseated the negro members. President Grant sent a message to Congress recommending drastic legislation. This act was the response. The state was readmitted July 15, 1870. [December 22, 1869]

Be it enacted . . . That the governor of the State of Georgia be, and hereby is, authorized and directed forthwith, by proclamation, to summon all persons elected to the general assembly of said State, as appears by the proclamation of George D. Meade, the general commanding the military district including the State of Georgia, dated June 25, 1868, to appear on some day certain to be named in said proclamation, at Atlanta, in said State; and thereupon, the said General Assembly of said State shall proceed to perfect its organization in conformity with the Constitution and laws of the United States according to the provisions of this act.

Sec. 2. . . . That when the members so elected to said senate and house of representatives shall be convened as aforesaid, each and every member and each and every person claiming to be elected as a member of said senate or house of representatives shall, in addition to taking the oath or oaths required by the constitution of Georgia also take and subscribe and file in the office of the secretary of state of the state of Georgia, one of the following oaths or affirmations, namely: "I do solemnly swear (or affirm, as the case may be) that I have never held the office or exercised the duties of a senator or a representative in Congress, nor been a member of the legislature of any State of the United States, nor held any civil office created by law, for the administering of any general law of a State, or for the administration of justice in any State, or under the laws of the United States, nor held any office in the military or naval service of the United States, and thereafter engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or gave aid or comfort to its enemies, or rendered, except in consequence of direct physical force, any support or aid to any insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or held any office under, or given any support to, any government of any kind organized or acting in hostility to the United States, or levying war against the United States. So help me God, (or on the pains and penalties of perjury, as the case may be)." Or the following oath or affirmation, namely: "I do solemnly swear (or affirm, as the case may be) that I have been relieved by an act of the Congress of the United States from disability as provided for by section three of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States. So help me God, (or on the pains and penalties of perjury as the case may be)." . . . And every person, claiming to be so elected, who shall refuse or decline or neglect or be unable to take one of the said oaths or affirmations above provided, shall not be admitted to a seat in said senate or house of representatives, or to a participation in the proceedings thereof, but shall be deemed ineligible to such seats.

Sec. 3. . . . If any person, claiming to be elected to said senate or house of representatives, as aforesaid, shall falsely take either of said oaths or affirmations as above provided, he shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and shall suffer the pains and penalties thereof, and may be tried, convicted, and punished therefor by the circuit court of the United States for the district of Georgia in which district said crime was committed, and the jurisdiction of said court shall be sole and exclusive for the purpose aforesaid.

Sec. 4. . . The persons elected, as aforesaid, and entitled to compose the said legislature, and who shall comply with the provisions of this act by taking one of the oaths or affirmations above prescribed, shall thereupon proceed, in said senate and house of representatives to which they have been elected respectively, to reorganize said senate and house of representatives, respectively, by the election and qualification of the proper officers of each house.

Sec. 5. . . If any person shall by force, violence, or fraud, wilfully hinder or interrupt any person or persons elected as aforesaid from taking either of the oaths or affirmations prescribed by the act, or from participating in the proceeding of said senate or house of representatives, after having taken one of said oaths or affirmations and otherwise complied with this act, he shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and may be tried, convicted, and punished therefor, by the circuit or district court of the United States for the district of Georgia, in which district said offense shall be committed, and shall be punished therefor by imprisonment at hard labor for not less than two nor more than ten years, in the discretion of the court, and the jurisdiction of said courts shall be sole and exclusive for the purpose aforesaid.

Sec. 6. . . It is hereby declared that the exclusion of any person or persons elected as aforesaid, and being otherwise qualified, from participation in the proceedings of said senate or house of representatives, upon the ground of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, would be illegal and revolutionary, and is hereby prohibited.

Sec. 7. . . Upon the application of the governor of Georgia, the President of the United States shall employ such military or naval forces of the United States as may be necessary to enforce and execute the preceding provisions of this act.

Sec. 8. . . The legislature shall ratify the fifteenth amendment proposed, to the Constitution of the United States before senators and representatives from Georgia are admitted to seats in Congress.

The Fifteenth Amendment

Statutes at Large, vol. xvi, p. 1131.

Sec. 1. The right of the citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.
